Smoke Stains

Remove the smoke stains from the bricks in front of the fireplace with a mixture of two ounces of soda, one ounce of pumice stone, one ounce of salt, with water sufficient to make a cream. Rub the bricks well with this solution and let remain for a few minutes; then brush off with a stiff brush.

Pie

If the cherries or berries are rolled in flour before putting them into the pie crust it will thicken the juice and prevent its running out.

Concrete Floors

Scrub concrete floors with a gallon of water to which a pound of lime and a handful of salt have been added.

The Stars Say --

By Genevieve Kemble

For Friday, October 28

IT MAY take a good measure of tactful, studied and astute action, with well-planned programs, in order to cope with sinister, subtle or peculiar situations, in which major objectives, cherished desires or hopes, may become entangled. Hidden or deep-seated undercurrents may be very difficult to fathom, but prudence, sustained effort and indomitable will-power may eventually win out, with a climax of new contacts, plans, or propositions arising from important sources.

For the Birthday

Those whose birthday it is, are urged to be on guard against a peculiar set of basic factors, or undercurrents, sinister, crafty, scheming and dubious. Such may prove a menace to cherished hopes, wishes, desires and plans of profound and enduring scope or purpose. Possessions, as well as personal elements, seem to be involved, especially where long-range objectives are jeopardized. Alert and sagacious plans, sound system and attention to details may attract support from high places ready with aid and perhaps offering new tactics or sound suggestions.

A child born on this day, while aspiring, ambitious, studious and well-meaning, may be involved in certain dubious or curious situations, menacing its career, unless prudently managed.

DOROTHY DIX SAYS -

Second Marriage

Can Woman Win Husband's Love From Memory Of Dead Wife?

DEAR MISS DIX: I am 26 years old and in love with a widower of 42. He has three children—a daughter, 14, son, 12, and a little boy, 4. This man frankly tells me that while he is very fond of me he could never give me the same deep and tender love he did his wife; also that I would come second to his children in his life; that he would marry primarily to give them ideal home surroundings. He says he has seen too many lives wrecked by second marriages where all memory of the first wife and mother was obliterated, so he wants the memory of his children's mother to be happily and lovingly fostered.

Now I love this man. He is fine and upright and could give me a good home, security and affection. Is it too much of a risk to marry him?

ANSWER: If you are of a jealous temperament do not marry the man, for a wife can get even more green-eyed over a poor dead lady in the cemetery than she can over a girl in her husband's office. And that's the idiosyncrasy of men who are forever throwing their first wife in their second wife's teeth, so to speak, and presenting invidious comparisons between them.

Consider that aspect of the problem, but also bear in mind that, in reality, your husband's first wife is the least dangerous rival you can possibly have, and that a cold, pale, shadowy ghost can easily be routed by a live, warm woman. Just bring your common sense to bear on the proposition—that it doesn't really matter who was first in a man's life, the important thing is to be one who possesses him at the present moment.

TALK ABOUT HER

Don't make your husband's first wife a taboo subject. Talk about her. Tell the children what a grand mother they had and you take all the kick out of secret heroine worship.

As for the children, they will soon be gone. Ten years at most and they will have flown the home nest. In the meantime, considering their father's attitude, do not assume the role of mother to them, but of a big sister. Leave all of the controlling and disciplining of them to their father and devote yourself to winning their friendship. Every man who marries a second time is so grateful to his wife for not quarreling with his children that he adores her.

DEAR DOROTHY DIX: My husband is the best man in the world. He just suits me. But he has one characteristic that has driven every one away from him and that forces us to live almost by ourselves. He is an incessant talker. He talks fluently and interestingly and with enthusiasm, but he never lets anybody get a word in even edgewise. People call once. They ask us to dinner once. But never again. I do not want to hurt my husband's feelings. What can I do about it?

ANSWER: Nothing, I am afraid, because when people are enamored of the sound of their own voices they are obsessed by a passion from which they are never weaned.

In reality, there are few things so wearisome as having to listen to a monologist, no matter how brilliant and entertaining he may be, and nobody's idea of a pleasant evening is sitting up in dumb silence listening to some one tell of his exploits or travels or relate stories. We want to chime in with the tale of our own adventures and tell our own jokes.

Nothing renders one so unpopular as to get the reputation of being a big talker. People avoid one as they would the plague. They dodge even meeting him on the streets because they know the endless talker will hold them up until they are ready to drop with exhaustion. But there is no cure for the talkers, because they imagine everybody is just hanging on their words.

DEAR MISS DIX: I have been married for six years to a man I have to support, who is so jealous of me that he won't let me have any girl friends or go anywhere. He says a wife's place is in the home and that I should have a hot meal prepared for him whenever he comes home from loafing around a poolroom, no matter what hour it is. What do you think I should do?

ANSWER: Evidently your husband doesn't think that a woman's place is in the home.

That Body Of Yours

By James W. Barton, M.D.

BEING PRONE TO ACCIDENTS

About 30 years ago a study was made of the individuals who seem to have accidents often; they are called accident-prone patients. This study showed that about 20 per cent of the people have the most accidents, while the remaining 80 per cent are comparatively accident safe. An editorial in the "Journal of the American Medical Association" some months ago stated that 90 per cent of the accidents are preventable, and four of every five accidents involving children are symptoms but other commission by adults. Factors inside the individual's own personality predispose some persons to accidents. Emotional disturbances such as worry, grief, anxiety and anger cause many to have no thought of their surroundings or even of their own actions. This abominable, even for a moment, because the individual is not alert, causes him not to jump or run with his usual speed, and so the accident occurs.

In the "New York Journal of Medicine," Dr. M. N. Gleason states that recently a psychiatrist from the University of Rochester School of Medicine and Dentistry suggested that a complete medical, psychological and mental examination, given to accident repeaters, especially children, might reveal not only the disorders of which the accidents are symptoms but other hidden disorders as well, of eyes, teeth, hearing, tonsils and other organs. The establishment of medical accident clinics has been suggested.

Fortunately, we have learned where the dangers lie in factories, on the highways and even in the home, and measures to prevent accidents are taken. However, accident-prone persons tend to be adventurous, like excitement and prefer action at all times which together with any physical defect, make them more likely to have accidents. The age group most prone to have accidents is 16 to 25.

In addition to the usual routine examination as to physical fitness, tests of the patient's ability to point straight after being whirled around, and eye and hearing tests, should be made.

It is also pointed out that patients using certain drugs which take away their "awareness" are often accident prone. It is stated that the bromides (quieting drugs) can so poison the system as to render him accident prone for from three to four months.
