

TORTURED FOR SIX MONTHS

Maritime Man Completely Relieved of Kidney Trouble by Gin Pills

When kidneys are inflamed or clogged life becomes a misery, as Mr. W. McArthur of St. John's B. realized. Fortunately, he also discovered Gin Pills, and gratefully wrote:

"I suffered for six months with kidney trouble. Doctors said I would have to have an operation before I could go back to my heavy work in the machine shop. I was advised to try Gin Pills by the druggist. After taking three boxes I had no more trouble."

Mr. McArthur is not the first person saved from the surgeon's knife by Gin Pills. For years, Gin Pills have relieved acute kidney conditions.

Never neglect backache, headache, brick dust in urine, swollen joints, dizziness, spots before the eyes, painful, scanty or too frequent urination, Nature's warning of kidney derangement. Play safe. Take Gin Pills, 50c a box at all druggists. National Drug & Chemical Co. of Canada, Limited, Toronto, Ontario.

SONIA

By VIDA HURST

So Sonia and Bertie went riding out to a roadhouse for sweet potatoes and baked ham. The dinner was delicious and had it been any one in the world but Bertie in the seat beside her Sonia would have enjoyed the ride.

"There is no earthly reason," she said here, "for the intense dislike I have for him. As if he were walking on my grave. Ugh!" She cringed when he laid his hand caressingly upon her knee.

They were on their way home, a lot in the long procession of automobiles. But Bertie had no desire to go home.

He parked along the beach, ostensibly to look at the lake. But he was down and most of the cars had gone. Sonia feared he had stopped merely in order to save the use of both hands. She was right. His hand slid over to hers.

"Don't!" she cried, sharply. "My goodness, don't tell the whole beach about it," he said, incensed at her tone.

"Leave me alone, then," said Sonia coldly. "If you touch me I'll get out and go home on the street car."

"Well you are the limit. Muncie must be a deuce of a place to bring a girl up in. Are you really so innocent as all that, mamma's baby?"

"Never mind how innocent I am," she cried. "I want you to keep your hands off me."

"Oh, you want me to?" "That's what I said."

"I take it that does not apply to all our little boy friends."

"And that does not concern you, Bertie."

"Oh, doesn't it? Listen here, young lady, who was it took you to your first dance in Chicago? Who were you with when you met Franklin Crane?"

"What does he have to do with it?"

She felt she could not endure to hear Bertie discuss Franklin Crane.

"That's what I want to know," said Bertie. "Just how much is he going to have to do with it?"

"You haven't any claim on me because you took me out a couple of times."

"I don't pretend to have. So long as you're decent to me you can step high and wide with any one you like. I know you went to the College Inn last night."

"What of it, Bertie?" asked Sonia, striving desperately to restrain the ground she had lost. Why shouldn't I go with him or any one else?"

tired. Why couldn't I sleep in the bathtub?"

She saw by the other girl's smile that her suggestion was instantly approved, although Maxine asked doubtfully, "Could you go to sleep? How do you mean?"

"Oh, I could pile blankets and pillows in to make it soft. I'm not so tall, and I could sleep on a rock tonight after my ride with Bertie."

By the time the doorbell rang she was encoiled in the bathtub. Maxine thought it better that Mac should not know of her presence yet. In spite of the cramped position and the low murmur in the other room Sonia drifted to sleep.

"To-morrow," she smiled, "is as long as I. I'm sure to see Franklin Crane."

Maxine was her radiant self at breakfast. Her blue eyes shone with happiness. Her skin was soft and clear.

"She's really pretty," thought Sonia.

Mac was carefully omitted from the conversation by both of them.

Sonia had a dim recollection of having been laughingly pulled from the tub some time near morning, then having dropped, aching, into the depths of dreamless slumber.

When they had finished their hasty breakfast and were seizing hats and pocket books Maxine said shyly: "Everything's O. K. again, Sonia."

"I'm awfully glad."

"I should think you would be. My disposition was simply fiendish, I know."

"I wonder," Sonia said as they hurried through the hall to the street, "if you don't want me to find another room somewhere—since you wanted a roommate because you quarreled with Mac?"

(tell-tale color creeping into his cheeks. "I'll tell you to-morrow then," he whispered.

INSTALLMENT VIII

Not until Franklin had descended from the balcony did Sonia's vision clear. She was annoyed with her utter lack of sophistication. That she who pined herself on her coldness should blush like a schoolgirl. Even the memory of those so recent school days brought no smile to her lips. They seemed ages behind her now, as if they belonged to another girl. Violet's laughter roused her.

"I'll say he's some man!" "Meaning what?" answered Sonia, busily jotting down figures again.

"Look at her, girls! Isn't she the perfect little bookkeeper? Not a flutter left in her now."

Sonia shrugged. "But when he stood beside her," Violet continued, stopping her adding machine. "Oh, I'd love to, Lord Franklin!"

Sonia could have boxed her ears. But she managed a bored smile to meet the smiles of the other girls in the department.

"Rave on, darling!" she said, indifferently. "I must be more careful, though," she thought, "I don't want the girls to think there's anything between us, especially not on my part."

Which was typically Sonia! It was with the intention to deceive the public, represented by the girls in her department, that she stopped her work for the second time to face Walter Henderson. In spite of his announced intention of looking her up, she had not seen him since Maxine's party weeks before.

"I wonder if you remember me?" he said now, speaking pleasantly to the other girls.

Sonia nodded. "Of course, I do! Walter Henderson, resident of Evanston, investor in the Thomas Real Estate company."

"Good for you," he cried, while Violet and Jimmy exchanged glances. "I've been on my vacation and I was afraid you'd have entirely forgotten me."

Sonia gave him a swift look. "I couldn't forget you, when you offered so charmingly to relieve me of my loneliness."

He laughed. "Don't rub it in. As I remember, you were quite vehement in your denial of any such thing."

"I know I wasn't very gracious that night."

His face beamed. "Absence seems to have made the little heart grow fonder. Yes?"

Sonia's eyes were very kind. She let them rest in his like a subtle caress, but without answering. "Sonia, he leaned across her desk. "How about dinner and a dance to-night?"

Sonia hesitated. "There's a stupid banquet on," Franklin Crane had said. Why not save her pride by accepting the invitation?"

"I should say not. You stay right here. I told you I needed the money, and if you don't mind sleeping in the bathtub occasionally—I'll do the same for you. Besides, Mac has promised to take me out to-morrow."

It was a glorious sunlit world they faced that morning. For some reason Sonia thought of it for weeks after. How they had stood arm in arm, waiting for their car, full of life and the joy of living, serene, confident.

violation of this rather interesting man?"

"Oh, I'd love to," she repeated for the second time that day. A snort from Violet. Sonia's face was serene and guileless. "It's awfully nice of you," she added sweetly. "You know I'm living with Maxine?"

His eyes widened at her information. "You are? Since when? Oh, but I thought—"

"I was at the Y. W.?" "Yes, I don't mean that—"

His eyes went to Maxine's well-developed figure and knot of blond hair. "Maxine told me you were just up from Muncie."

"And what has that to do with it?"

He laughed, amused at her direct challenge. "A great deal, little Sonia, if you but knew it. Maxine is too old for you."

Russian Ballet Coming To U. S. A.

PARIS, Nov. 28.—After years of efforts, Roy Goetz has succeeded in making a contract which will bring the Imperial Russian Ballet of 100 dancers, under Serge Diaghleff, to the United States this winter, Mr. Goetz announced today.

Goetz had tried to get the Imperial Ballet under contract, but he found it almost impossible to get the dancers together.

"The dancers who belonged to the Imperial Ballet before the Russian revolution, were assembled from all parts of the world, where they were refugees. Diaghleff plans to present the works of modernist composers, such as Stravinsky, Ravel and Lord Berners."
