BURGESS BEDTIME

It made them cough. But they were safe and they knew they were safe. Nothing else mattered. For a long time they sat there side by side wondering what was happening outside. There is no window, not even a peephole in Paddy's house. Once or twice they were startled by hearing faintly the crash of falling trees weakened by the merciless flames. Such air as seeped in was not only unpleasantly smoky but unpleasantly warm. What must it be outside?

For a long time Paddy was content to stay right there. Then he began to worry. What was happening outside? What about his neighbors who had no safe houses to go into? What about the uncult food trees, the ones he and Mrs. Paddy had planned to cut and float out to the winter foodpile? What had the Red Terror done to those? When he could stand it no longer he decided to go out and see what had happened.

"Don't begged Mrs. Paddy. You stay right here where you are safe."

"I'll take just a look and if it isn't safe I'll come right back," said Paddy.

"Wait a little longer," begged Mrs. Paddy.

But Paddy was too worried to wait longer, or was it curiosity that he couldn't resist? Anyway he slipped down into the water-filled hall and out the doorway at the bottom, then rose to the surface and floated there with just his nose and eyes above water. What a sight!

The next story: "What Paddy the Beaver Saw."

POOR WEED CONTROL CAUSES RED NOSES

WINNIPEG, Sept. 29 — (CP) — Watery-eyed, red-nosed hay fever victims received the support and sympathy of Alderman F. L. Chester at a council meeting here but his efforts were not powerful enough to obtain an additional appropriation of $2,000 for weed extermination.

Ald. Jacob Penner and several of his colleagues said it was too late the damage had already been done. The mistake had been made earlier in the year, when no appropriation whatever had been made for weed control. Later, $2,000 had been appropriated for the work—but it had been entirely insufficient.

Ald. H. B. Scott said that if vacant lots were sprayed with 2-4-D, a weed killer, $2,000 would destroy all the weeds in Winnipeg. He urged this method of extermination to be used next year.

Spot should not be left in the furnace as it will (Mr. James) makes us wish to become better acquainted with the man than we possibly can through the few available records of that period."

Early Church History in P.E.I.

(By Ursula Jew)

Reporting to the Conference of 1839, Mr. Metherall wrote: "I am happy to inform you that we have had satisfying results from a revival held at New London. A goodly number were converted, among them five members of the same family. This has greatly encouraged me, for we labored there a long time without witnessing much good being done."

Among the local preachers who helped the missionaries during those hectic days, the names of Josiah Ayers, Jessie Whitlock, and Parmena Watts, stand out conspicuously. But the congregations that were not too well organized soon drifted from the flock. This was not the fault of the missionaries for they did their work well and truthfully. The fault was there was not enough preachers to hold the vineyards which these gallant and heroic servants of God had cultivated.

Their was no easy task, to pass from one district to another, to say nothing of travelling from Vernon River to West Cape over roads that in most cases were nothing but blazed trails. Add to such hardships the heat of summer and the snows and frosts of winter and the reader will better understand the hardships which these early missionaries had to endure. Horses were hard to come by, and when they were used they were forced to swim across streams as bridges and boats were few and far between.

Mr. Metherall, in going to China Point to hold service, used to walk around by the shore of the river, where he was met by Thomas Tweedy and carried on the young man's back across the channel.

The story is told of a couple of ministers who set out on foot from the Union Road to where the Lot 10 Church now stands.

After walking eighteen miles night overtook the pair and they found themselves lost in the forest. Presently they came to a fallen tree across a creek, and they attempted to use the tree as a bridge; but when half way over the tree broke causing them both to fall into the water. Cold and wet to the skin they were obliged to spend the rest of the night in the woods. When morning broke the sun rose over a frozen, white blanket of snow. To go on without breakfast was out of the question, so they retraced their steps to a remote dwelling where they dined on potatoes and whey.

For three years Francis Metherall had no horse, and made all his journeys on foot through the mud and slush of fall and spring. During the winter months, he plodded here and there through snowdrifts. His salary was so small he had no friends to buy or provide for the maintenance of such a luxury as a horse.

But later on provisions were made for ministers of the Island to own horses of their own. In the year 1840, Philip James was sent to Ontario, where he continued his work as a minister several years. He had served on the Island about six years, and preached his valedictory sermon in the Union Road Church.

Mr. James was well fitted for missionary work, and rendered valuable help to the early church in this province.

G. Webster, writing in the "Observer," had this to say:

"The few glimpses we have caught of him (Mr. James) makes us wish to become better acquainted with the man than we possibly can through the few available records of that period."

CANADIAN TEXTILES SAID BEST IN WORLD

MONTREAL Sept. 29 — (CP) — Canadian textiles are the best in the world, says Emile Collette, president of the Silk and Rayon Manufacturers' Association.

At a press conference, he said that Montreal is becoming a world fashion centre due to the growing independence of Canada's textile mills in fabric design and production.

The textile executive attributes this to the fact that 13 of Canada's 14 rayon mills are in the province of Quebec. From the creative point of view, French-Canadian textile workers have inherited a tradition of old handloom handcraft which goes into their work.

This, he said, makes the distinctive Canadian design which, in return, leads to distinctive Canadian fashions.

Most Canadian mills now have their own designers and research department. The industry is also growing color-conscious with the mills turning out 30 to 40 shades, compared with five to 10 shades only a decade ago.

Mr. Collette emphasized that Canadian textile prices were also lower than those of other countries.
