NEW COAT OF MAIL. Entire Tunics of Tarnished Silver, Dropped from Neck to Knees. Warrior-Like Corsage is Embroidered With Pearls, Brilliants and Flashes of Steel—Jewel Headdress.

Not only Cheruit, but many other French dressmakers, have lent their ear to making a pronounced fashion out of silver tissue. Two years ago observes a prominent writer, we grew excessively weary of evening gowns made of superimposed pieces of tulle on a metallic foundation, and when the thought of silver and gold tissues presents itself as a fashion, we turn away from it in a petulant manner.

But wait! This revival of a coat of mail for women's warrior's uniform of ancient days which no modern fighter would touch, is another and a more pleasing thing than the evening gown of metallic cloth.

Entire tunics, in the twelfth century fashion, are made of tarnished silver dropped from neck to knees, or longer, over skirts of blood red or midnight blue satin or velvet. Except for the costliness of the material, the tunics have all the simplicity of primitive dressing. Their introduction into the early spring fashions has brought about a quantity of silver used in every way.

Mme. Simone, of the Theatre Antoine in Paris, is wearing, I hear, a wonderful gown which is being copied for this country. It is of silver cloth faced with red, hanging in panels on the ground over a slim, tight skirt that clings to the figure as she walks. The warrior-like corsage is embroidered with pearls, brilliants and flashes of cut steel. To it she adds a warrior's headdress made of the same jewels as in the corsage and mounted on silver cloth.

Wherever silver can be flicked in and out of a frock to enliven it, the designer loses no chance of trying out her ingenuity through this channel. When she abandons the Russian blon of gold and bronze metallic cloth, which drops over a skirt of bronze satin, she takes the same material and uses it in bands, cuffs and high, wrinkled collars that enclose the chin like a fence.

It is a strange idea, this bringing out of a new coat of mail for women as the spring approaches. Is it a recognition of their first victory toward suffrage and the fact that they may be counted as warriors today in civic national and war work.

TO RELIEVE CATARRHAL DEAFNESS AND HEAD NOISES.

If you have Catarrhal Deafness or head noises go to your druggist and get 1 ounce of Parmit (double strength), and add to it 1-4 part of hot water and a little granulated sugar. Use 1 tablespoonful four times a day.

This will often bring quick relief from the distressing head noises. Closed nostrils should open, breathing become easy and the mucus stop dropping into the throat. It is easy to prepare, costless and is pleasant to take. Any one who has Catarrhal Deafness or head noises should give this prescription a trial.

UNSUCCESSFUL RAID.—Having reason to believe that intoxicating liquor was kept for sale in violation of the Prohibition Act, in a store on Water street, the police with a search warrant accompanied by Prosecutor Phillips, proceeded thereto, on Thursday afternoon, when a diligent search of the premises was made, but nothing of a suspicious nature was found. The bill prepared by the Prohibition Commission and recently passed, has no doubt already made the sale of liquors in this town much more stringent than formerly. H.

JAPANESE EAT WHALES

They Have Been Doing It for Hundreds of Years.

For hundreds of years whale meat has been used for food in Japan. In the earliest books of Japanese history there are accounts of the capture of whales with nets and the ceremonies and feasting which followed a successful hunt.

But whale meat did not become a really important factor in Japanese daily life until about twenty years ago when modern shore whaling was introduced in the empire. The Japanese had watched closely the development in Europe of the harpoon gun and the swift little steam vessels with which whales could be taken in great numbers and the Toyo Hogel Mabushiki Kaisha (Oriental Whaling Company, Limited) was eventually formed to carry on operations in Japan. Today it is the largest and most progressive whaling company in the world. When once fairly launched upon the new venture the Japanese proceeded in a characteristically thorough way. They secured from Norway the finest equipment obtainable and hired the most expert whalers to teach them the modern methods of killing and preparing whales. Moreover, their efforts did not cease there, for they not only took the best from the Norwegian methods, but introduced improvements adapted to their own special needs.—Roy Chapman Andrews in Asia.
