Make Your Newspaper Advertising Profitable

Newspaper advertising costs too much for experimenting. It is mistaken economy to try it today and stop it tomorrow. The wheels of business should never stop and the whole machine is out of gear unless the big advertising wheel is always turning. A constant ad works all the time and charges no overtime.

You'll admit that the newspaper is the greatest medium of advertising, and if "any old kind" of advertising pays haven't you every reason to believe that with the attention of specialists your advertising would prove much more profitable. Advertising is our business—we know how to analyse your goods, to pick out their strong selling points, we understand the class of people you are catering to, then we prepared the advertising in an interesting "catchy" way that will beget confidence. With all we give the printer a design to follow—showing how to lay out the ads so that they will "stand out" from other ads—that will be attractive. The same as an architect gives plans for a building.

This service is a combination of newspapers and advertising specialists—the strongest forces known to day in the mercantile world.

And, then, the very fact of our carrying a large list of clients enables us to quote merchants prices that would not permit them to even waste their time if they were specialists in advestising.

No advertising or printed matter too large or small to receive our attention—when you think of advertising, think of us. We'll take pleasure in quoting prices. Phone 123.

Living Up to One's Features

The girl with the inquiring nose took a good look at her profile, surmounted by a new hat, in the mirror with the aid of a handglass. Then she sat down suddenly and despairingly.

"It's no use," she said to her best friend, who, in the role of millinery adviser, sat at a critical distance and gazed at her. "It's never been any use since my nose decided to take after mamma's family and turn up instead of papa's family and keep to the straight and narrow way.

"You don't know how terribly hard it has always been for me, Belinda, to live up to my features. Now, what kind of a disposition should you say goes with a nose like mine?"

"Flippancy, irrelevancy, flirtatiousness, gayety, insouciance," said her friend, checking off each unredeeming fault on her fingers. "Exactly, and do you think any of them fits me? Not at all. They only fit my nose. I tell you truly, Belinda, I've never dared be myself for one moment on account of my nose. All my yearning to be literary has been nipped by my nose. Whoever saw a literary person with a turn-up nose? I was dying to be musical and practiced furiously, until one day I found out, glancing up at myself in a mirror opposite while I was playing a Chopin nocturne, that my nose struck a false note. There was nothing to do but give up my music after that.

"The only thing I am fit for is to keep a tea room, and even then I don't believe my patrons could be hoodwinked into the belief that my nose was financially sound. To accomplish anything worth while in this life, Belinda, you must first have the features for it."

"The worst part of it all," she added, taking off the offending hat and poking it into the bandbox, "is that you must dress for the part your features call upon you to play. Here I am, with a sober, sedate mushroom hat, of the most conservative order, on my hands, and I don't dare put it on my head. I look like a guy in it. Internally I am sober, sedate, and conservative. Externally I am flippant, pert and saucy. The internal qualities don't count in the purchase of headgear. You must buy hats to match the externals. Here, try it on yourself, Belinda. It looks charming on you. Why don't you buy it?"

"Because I am so tired of it," murmured her friend.

"Tired of it? Why it's brand new. It's only just come. What are you talking about?"

"Tired of that style," explained Belinda wearily. "All my life I've had to wear that style. I long for something that turns up and turns down in an irresponsible sort of way; something—something saucy, in fact."

"You!" exclaimed her friend. "Why, Belinda, what's come over you?" "I, too, am beset by my features," confessed Belinda. "I can't get away from them. My outer husk shows me a reposeful picture of brooding serenity. I am at heart—positively rakish. There's a Bohemian streak in me one yard wide. Of course you don't believe it of me, and I've never confessed it before to any one, but I'm fairly bubbling over with the spirit of adventure. I long to do and say outrageous things, to defy the community, and set it by the ears. The primrose path beckons me, and Pan's pipes lure me on."

"And yet there's no more sober an individual among my friends than you," cried her astounded chum.

"Yes, I know," Belinda said definitely, "and there's no one who suffers more from repressed individuality than I. We are both overruled by a set of features which were not intended for us at all. We are both living under assumed personalities, assumed purely to back our features. You wish to be literary with an upturned nose, and I, with a nose that rivals Dante's and the thin lips of Cornelia, mother of the Gracchi, am bacchanalian at heart. If we could only change temperaments; but we can't. My friends would be as horrified as yours."

"Providence must certainly have been absent-minded when we were created," said the girl with the inquiring nose sadly.

"Yes," agreed Belinda, "and I suppose Bernard Shaw understood this a little when he said: 'Do unto others as you would have them do unto you. Their tastes may not be the same.' You can't judge a person by his features. What are we going to do about it?"

"Let's have tea," said her friend lucidly. "Maybe that will clear our brains and help us decide on some plan of action that will only startle the world by degrees."

PERFECT FEET GROWING SCARCE.

Prof. Redorta, of Bellinzena, has been making a study of the feet of men and women of past and present generations. Photographs, paintings and statues have guided him to his present conclusions, as well as the examination of the feet of hundreds of men and women.

He declares that not one woman in a score has a perfect foot, owing to the wearing of high-heeled and pointed-toed shoes. Men have somewhat the advantage in this respect as they are less under the sway of fashion as regards their boots and so have preserved the beauty of their feet more fully.

Russian, German, American, Austrian and Dutch women all have feet too broad to be perfect, though in the case of the American women the feet are small. English women's feet are too narrow to fulfil classical and healthy conditions. The women of the Latin races, excluding the French have the best formed feet and therefore the prettiest feet. The French woman has destroyed any semblance to beauty in her feet by her absurd shoes.

The professor urges the abolition of the modern boot and recommends walking in sandals and going barefoot in the house.

The enterprising farmer works with his head as well as his hands. This is the day of brain and brawn—this is the year of advancement and achievement and this is the age of doing things instead of talking.

Many of the farmers of this province have just as much executive ability as most of our business men, yet there's hundreds of homes in this very province that are losing money annually by the absence of the phone. Still we don't blame them. The fact is, that they were never shown the real uses a phone could be put to—they were never met half way. We are going to conduct an aggressive campaign for the farmer—we are going to break down every barrier that is in the way of progress and we are going to put the phone within reaching distance of every farmer—watch us.

If you have a phone you can do things while other people are thinking about it—and you can get all the information you want from any part of the province while another person is getting ready to write.

Mr. Farmer the phone is just as necessary to successful farming as your binder or horses. If you had a phone it's then you would appreciate it rightly. We have a proposition that will prove interesting to you—that you can't afford to overlook. Will you come half way by mailing us a card for information—will you permit this organization to show you the way to the front?

Can't we send you all particulars—all you've have to do is to send your address—better write right now!

The Telephone Co. of P. E. Island
