

Allying Men and Women Need This Tonic

Feet sing of Spring, but practical-minded people, everywhere, turn at this time to the Doctor and the Druggist for help to build up run-down constitutions. And no better remedy can be taken than Buckley's TRU-BLOOD.

TRU-BLOOD, as its name implies, is a true blood tonic and a safe, sure, powerful corrective for all blood disorders, and rheumatic conditions as well.

But "TRU-BLOOD" is more than a blood purifier—its use eradicates the outward evidences of impoverished blood, such as pimples, boils, eczema, blotches and all other skin affections.

Buckley's OINTMENT, used in conjunction with Buckley's TRU-BLOOD, heals magically and leaves the skin smooth and soft.

Especially during the adolescent age, simple and various forms of skin blemishes appear. They mar the complexion and cause untold anguish. The combined TRU-BLOOD and Buckley's OINTMENT treatment promptly corrects the condition and leaves the skin clear, smooth and colorful.

Most druggists can supply you with these proven Buckley products.

"Jealous Hearts"

By MILDRED BARBOUR

RELINQUISHMENT

Elinor was a little frightened at what she had done. For Millicent stood so still, and her face was so white and expressionless. She took a step backward and looked about her, as if she were frightened, and went over to the window.

"It's the truth, Millicent," Somehow, Elinor felt a justification in the fact that she was telling the truth. "Tony went to you, after I had refused him three times. He went, because, under the conditions of Uncle Dan's will, you'd have been left almost penniless. I took the pittance and gave you the fortune and Tony."

She felt very virtuous, as she uttered that last sentence.

"Now that Millicent knows the truth," she thought, absolving herself as usual, "it will be easier for her to give him up."

"I see," said Millicent, after a long silence. "I should have seen long ago, shouldn't I?"

There was something in her voice, in her expression, that reminded Elinor of the days when they had played together in the old nursery at Carver Hall. Millicent seemed suddenly like a hurt child. Her air of sophistication had dropped from her. Her expression was that of a person wounded almost beyond endurance.

Elinor fidgeted a trifle uncomfortably. She came to Millicent and slipped an arm about her shoulders.

"Don't let's wrangle over Tony," she said coaxingly. "We mustn't forget that we're foster-sisters, cousins, by blood."

"No, we mustn't forget that!" murmured Millicent. She was giving in to Elinor, just as she always had, when they were children.

But she seemed stunned. Elinor was beginning to be impatient; she wondered if a brisk shaking would bring Millicent out of her daze.

Quite suddenly, Millicent smiled and tried to regain her poise. Her effort to appear matter-of-factly smote Elinor unpleasantly.

"Why, how absurd we are!" said Millicent. "There's nothing to it, after all. It's so obvious! I've just been frightfully blind."

"Of course, you have!" nodded Elinor, in agreement. "Just as I've been. But, now that our eyes are

FARMER'S WIFE GETS STRENGTH

By Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Wilton, Ont.—"I am taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound through the Change of Life. It helps me and I cannot praise it too highly. I was troubled with heat flashes and my limbs were heavy so I could hardly walk to do my farm work. I saw in the newspapers your ad about the Vegetable Compound and thought to give it a trial. The first bottle gave me relief and I have told others what it does for me. I am willing for you to use my letter if you choose."—Mrs. D. B. PETERS, Wilton, Ontario.

KING COLE TEA

opened, it isn't too late to make up for these wasted years.

Millicent stared at her curiously. She was seeing more than Elinor in her rich bronze velvet gown, with her copper-colored hair gleaming in the firelight. She was seeing scenes and figures from the past.

They have been wasted years, haven't they?" she agreed gravely. "And so full of lies and deception and misunderstanding. I've been jealous, thinking things that weren't true. And Tony's been loving you and having to pretend to love me. And you've been chasing success, when it was really only Tony you wanted. What a ghastly muddle one can make of life!"

She returned to the window and the gray landscape, over which a chill, bleak twilight was falling.

"We've dragged so many other people into our particular muddle, Elinor," she went on quietly. "That doesn't seem fair. Guy Peterson for instance. He and Tony were friends, and I separated them, trying to make Tony jealous. And there's Margaret Crossley, eating her heart out for Tony's love, when he's only playing with her to forget you. There are others, too, who've been caught in our little spider's web of jealousy and deceit."

She paused, for a moment, sighed, and continued, while Elinor stared into the fire.

"Father Deering, too. He was so very unhappy during his last years, because he guessed that Tony and I were making a mess of our marriage. I hurt him, too, trying to be different, because Tony had hurt me. I was flippant and cruel. It isn't fair that we should have hurt so many people, is it?"

Elinor made no answer. Millicent wasn't blaming her, apparently, but for the first time in her life, she felt a pang of remorse. It caused her a bit of discomfort. She said nothing.

Only the crackling of the fire on the hearth broke the silence. The room was dim with shadows. Neither Elinor nor Millicent had made a move to turn on the lights.

Suddenly, as she sat there, Elinor began to wonder whether Millicent, on second thought, might not become obstinate and refuse to give up Tony. She felt that she must have the matter settled now. Finally she couldn't stand the silence any longer. She must know what Millicent planned to do. Her voice, tense with excitement, sounded harsh and brisk to her own ears, as she asked:

"Well, Millicent, what is it to be?" Millicent's voice was quiet and even.

"Why, that's simple. I'll do whatever Tony wants me to do—whatever will make him happy. I had intended to fight for him, but in view of what you have told me, that would have been useless. I'm really glad to know why he asked me to marry him. I'm glad to know the truth. What a fool I should have been—fighting to hold a man who had never loved me—even when he proposed to me."

She was silent for a moment. Then she said:

"I'll try to get Mrs. Crossley's brother's address from some one at the club. I'll wire Tony to come home at once. We'll leave everything to him."

Elinor was satisfied. If everything were left to Tony, she would have what she wanted.

Historians. The splendid clat with which the members of the Medical Association of Canada flocked to this city on Monday, and largely since then, showed that the profession is proud of its noble tradition and humane work in the wide domain of Medicine. They also have reason for congratulation on the great expansion and brilliant achievements they have displayed to the world by the swelling membership and scientific progress to which they can point in every province in Canada.

In 1882 the construction of the C. P. Railway had only just then begun, but nevertheless there was a march on the "Long Train Trail" of medicos setting out in the wake of the Railways to achieve both fame and fortune in the land of Opportunity, and to state that they have grandly succeeded is only voicing a truism.
