GLANDS NOW BLAMED FOR CERTAIN CRIMES

Whether it was indeed a question of thyroid or defective functioning at some other point of the still half-mysterious system which we call the internal secretory glands, the recognition of a gland as a special plea by County Judge William R. Bayes, of Kings County, New York, gives evidence of the link, stronger than the public knows, between the court and clinic. Dr. Max G. Schlapp, of that city, whose work at the Clearing House for Mental Defectives is widely known, says that this intelligent attitude towards crimes committed by the insane, has for some time been supplanting that of uniform condemnation, writes Marian Storm in the New York Post. Tendencies to wrongdoing of a woman lately arrested are in truth due to a disturbance of the chemical balance of the blood, and can be treated and perhaps quite cured, says Dr. Schlapp, and by medical or surgical means, involving neither the prison nor the insane asylum. "This chemical balance of the blood has plain to the neurologist. The repeated emotional jar of "thrilling" scenes overstimulates the suprarenal gland to an ultimately chronic unbalanced chemical activity. The little boy criminal who has been so much in the news is the victim of a chemical tempest in the blood.

An example, which every one can understand, of the raising or lowering of the threshold of functional activity by chemicals in the system is seen in the use of ether. Ether acts selectively. It raises this threshold so high that there is no longer any motor response to outer sensations. The patient does not stir. But the heart goes on beating and respiration continues. The remarkable anaesthetic does not shift their threshold at all. Perhaps you could call the undesirable movie a moral ether. "Be good" is not to let people get the impression, from the case of Mrs. Liebowitz, that all hyper-thyroids are criminals inclined," said Dr. Schlapp. "They may be just mildly hysterical women. While there is a normal point at which the stimulated emotions override the repressive forces of the intellectual side of the brain, this threshold, or explosion point of nervous energy, varies greatly in individuals."

Police Chief Capture p

Catskill, N. Y., Aug. 10. — Two intoxicated automobilists driving a high rate of speed through Catskill this afternoon, were stopped by Chief of Police Ryan for speeding and started toward the office of the police station, when one of the men in the car seized the chief, holding him in his seat, while the other turning the car around, started on a wild ride toward the mountains.

The chief's cries for help started a rescue party, who soon overtook the automobile after Chief Ryan had wrenched himself free, and ran the car into a tree. The men, Oliver Curtis, of Quarryville, and William Simmons, address not given, were placed under arrest and are lodged in the Greene county jail, charged with operating an automobile while intoxicated, and with resisting arrest.

PEOPLE WILL TALK

You may get through the world. But 'twill be very slow. If you listen to all that is said as you go.

For people will talk.

You'll be worried and fretted, and kept in a stew. For meddlesome tongues must have something to do. And people will talk.

Crime Not Inevitable

Now the disturbance of any one of these exceedingly delicate organs, according to Dr. Schlapp, may well excuse a crime. On the other hand, that same condition may have no evil result whatever—may produce merely an interesting individuality, or else an emotional but in no sense criminal predisposition. In case glandular abnormality is called into court as a defence, as it is in the deferred sentence of Mrs. Liebowitz, it cannot, of course, be permitted to free the offender to continue his unlawful activities. Where can a man who has committed a crime by reason of unstable emotionalism be sent? He cannot be turned back upon society, any more than the murderous maniac. "Nor can he," says Dr. Schlapp, "be sent to an asylum. He is intellectually normal, but emotionally diseased. There is often nothing for it, at present, but to send such persons to prison—a barbarous necessity. What we need is a great detention hospital, and the law should be changed so that those who are suspected of having committed crimes through emotional defects could be held there to be investigated. Later they should be taken to special institutions to be treated and healed."

Before the Bank of England was founded in 1684, there were no banks in that country.

Fall Fairs

C. E. MacKenzie

A good fair should be each year a milestone in the advancement of the surrounding country in which it is held.

It should be above all things a funning and live stock fair, at any time and more particularly now that we are in the transition period when good fairs count and the proper standing of agriculture. Some one has said that "management makes or breaks any business," exhibitions included.

Heretofore details in connection of holding exhibitions have left a great deal of room for improvement and those who spend their money to see the show are not always treated the best that the association or management can afford. Suggestions as to improvement in management are not considered out of place.

Educational features should be made a strong factor at any fair, big or small.

People are brought out to see something and the best efforts should be put forth to make it easy for those who attend to see what they came to see. One of the best methods and one that should be adopted by all exhibition managements, would be a large bulletin board placed in a conspicuous place just inside the gates, to direct people where to find that which they are most interested in, and should be followed up with books and catalogue entries. The public are entitled to know the names of exhibitors and what they are exhibiting, and exhibitors are entitled to this consideration. Besides a catalogue will pay if properly handled as business cards only to give the pay for space where they can come in contact with the public.

A fair should not be to the visitor a jumble of things in any order. The public is entitled to a consideration other than the getting of their money. A good catalogue is one of the first steps toward a good fair but it should be in an early and carefully compiled form. It should be the means of putting agriculture in its proper place. Exhibits should be well placed and labelled so that the people should know at a glance what they are looking at. The various breeds of stock should be so stabled that all representatives of each breed are close together and over them the name of the breed placed conspicuously.

The stables should be large enough to accommodate stock without crowding and so arranged that visitors can see them to advantage. Every animal should be labelled and named.

Judging rings should be large enough to properly show stock and should be in a conspicuous place. The practice of judging in two or three small rings should be done away with and be replaced with something up-to-date.

Proper seating capacity is another thing sadly lacking at our shows and treat your customers well and they will come back, and the fair treating their patrons best gets a lot of free advertising.

At the majority of our shows live stock seem to be only a necessary evil as they are placed in some back corner and almost require a search warrant to find where they are situated and are looked upon by the management as only a little side show.

This is not as it should be, people should be encouraged to see it, to take an interest in it, and to enjoy it by better stabling, larger judging rings and a more reasonable schedule of judging and seats for all who would watch.

The management of a Fair which is essentially an Agricultural exhibition should have some interest in, and know something of live stock, and agriculture in general.

The sole aim should not be to get money but to give the people something for their time and trouble exhibitors and visitors alike.

It is time to wake up and let us have shows that are real shows where agriculture and stock raising will be placed, where it very properly belongs, at the top of the list.
