KILLS FLIES ON CONTACT - LASTS FOR MONTHS

Apart from the nuisance, flies around a garbage can are a menace to health, especially where there are young children.

You can stop this danger... easily, effectively and economically... by painting the garbage tin inside and out with the new Certicide DDT Varnish.

Certicide is a colorless, brush-on coating, containing 5% DDT... sufficient to kill any fly or insect which lands on it for months.

Use Certicide also on screens, veranda furniture and woodwork, baseboards and wherever flies, cockroaches, ants and other pests congregate.

Ellen's Diary

many a visit to the nest sheltered by the rose-stems at lane side before the small ones find the benefit of their wings.

Our visitors yesterday at Alderley included a lady from the Canadian West. She is one, who, to me, stepped out of a picture on our parlor mantle, one I had dusted and replaced many a time down the years, and perhaps never expected to see in the flesh. Cousin to James, she is, and of the same family name. Her girlhood home is in a distant, picturesque and historical section of the island, though her mother was born in the house on the hill, was reared in the district, and I believe once taught in the school down the river road. Her remains are interred in the West, which in time became the land of her adoption. There it was that "before your time, Ellen," the widowed mother, and daughter and her husband and family moved. Only infrequently in the intervening years, have we had word from them, though often on a Sunday, James would bring the pictures from the parlor and we would look them over again, and thus keep old memories of his evergreen. And in the turn of the years, both mother and husband passed away, and her family grown and gone to their own cares, it remained for this lady to revisit the scenes of her childhood alone. "It's a good many years," I overheard her tell James "since I last had red clay on my shoes." Then she laughed, and it is a laugh that is full of humor, and yet a bit sad for the ones and the days that are no more. May her stay be pleasant and may she gather many nice memories of the island of her birth, before once more she turns to take her way back to home and loved ones in the West!

James actually forgot to be gallant this morning. When, because it had been on the top of my mind I had mentioned blithely: "This is our anniversary James. We've been married... years," he said: "Well, well, Ellen... it seems a lot longer than that!" James was in his armchair at the time, enjoying a leisurely after breakfast smoke before going out to join Jack as the whitewashing. It must have been the return of the day, or perhaps it was just this June time, now almost gone, that turned his thoughts then to romance. We went on then to discuss a pair of bachelors who had been our guests last evening, going out in the moonlight towards home—poor fellows—and it the exquisite June evening entirely wasted on them. "There's no need of them remaining bachelors," James said. "If I had nothing to keep me home—I mean the crop all in and the house not on—and giving a week off, it would be no trouble at all to fetch home a woman." I shook the crumbs from the breakfast cloth to Pard and Tabby on a veranda, then returned to fold it neatly away. "I suppose," I said, piqued a bit at the thought it wouldn't take you nearly so long to take her back?" James put aside his pipe and reached for his cap. "I reckon, Ellen," he said smiling shyly "she wouldn't ever want to go back." June is about to leave now, cool and lovely, the moon round above a hilltop, and the fragrance of roses, and lilacs a-dying, wanders in the window.

Until tomorrow — Diary — Good-night.

Seven Sailed For Pleasure
By Graham Yorks

While Venturis knew that he had appeared the man for the time being, he knew that the longer the yacht remained fast in the island and at the mercy of a doubtful Providence the more difficult the men would become and the last thing the Captain wanted to add to his troubles was mutiny, though what good mutiny would do them under the present circumstances he could not possibly foresee.

After dinner Stephen and Moyna went up on deck and found there another wonderful tropical night. Stephen pulled two chairs up for them besides the rail that overlooked the island.

Moyna Winstanley felt strangely happy as she sat beside Stephen and though he had never yet made love to her she felt confident that the time would come when he would regard her in the light of something more than a girl who had been wonderfully kind and considerate for his wife.

Neither spoke for a long time. They sat there drinking in the exotically-perturbed air, for the tropical plants that surrounded their aroma on the faint breeze that blew around them.

"You're still worried, Stephen?" The girl's voice jerked him out of his reverie.

"Just a little," he owned. "You've Kitly, have you?"

She shook her head in the gloom. "Not yet. Do you think she will?"

"I don't know what's afoot," he told her truthfully.

At that moment Sir Timothy came along the deck carrying a large acetylene lantern that cast strange "emerald" light on the deck. He was accompanied by Ursula de Botville and one of the lounge stewards carrying a small hamper.

"Hello, you two," he greeted them with greater heartiness than usual. "Aren't you coming to join our rix-bouquet for the night?"

Stephen said that he had not seen Lady Kitly.

"I might fall in love!"

"If you'll excuse us, sir I don't feel quite up to the mark yet. Must get plenty of sleep. At least so nurse tells me."

Sir Timothy guffawed loudly. "That's a right old story. How's your first class nurse. When next I get my first twinge of gout I'm going to get her to combine nursing with pedicure!"

Moyna: "If you can put up with a patient like Hytton, you can manage an old bear like me."

Moyna Winstanley laughed. "I've always liked nursing," she replied simply and shyly.

"Good!" boomed Sir Timothy. "I'll have to see about it, well, we'd better be moving, Ursula. If either of you two see Lady Kitly tell her we've gone on ahead."

With that parting instruction, Sir Timothy and his small party moved away in the direction of the gang-plank.

"So they're going to spend the night in the restaurant," mused Stephen. "And Lady Kitly and Greatrix will most likely be following on."

"It does seem rather odd," whispered Moyna. "Tell me, Stephen, do you really mean what you told Sir Timothy that you're not feeling up to the mark?"

"Good Lord, no! I'm as fit as a fiddle. It was only an excuse to remain behind here—with you."

"That's nice of you, Stephen."

ROTHESAY N.B., July 8 (CP) — Theme addressed by Rev. Dr. G. B. Snell, Toronto, continued today at the ninth biennial conference of the Dominion Anglican Young People's Association. His topic, "The human agent in evangelism," was the subject of a group discussion.

Trainer-McGuire Nuptials

St. Gertrude's Church, Woodstock, N. B., was the scene of a very pretty wedding, when Very Rev. Deen McCarthy with nuptial mass united in marriage Margaret Ann, daughter of Mrs. and the late J. P. McGuire and John Thomas, son of Mrs. and the late L. F. Trainer of Charlottetown, P.E.I.

The bride wore a street length dress of grey and brown crepe with halo hat of grey milan straw trimmed with brown corded ribbon and black accessories carrying a corsage of yellow roses. The bride was attended by her sister, Miss Helen A. McGuire, R. N. of St. John, who wore a street length dress of grey crepe, with pink and blue flowered hat with elbow length pink gloves. Her corsage was of pink carnations.

Mrs. McGuire, mother of the bride, wore a two piece dress of black crepe with black fur and black accessories. Her corsage was of shaded pink snapdragons. The bride was given in marriage by her eldest brother Gerald. The ushers were Francis McGuire, brother of the bride and a cousin, John Johnston. The groom was supported by Bradford O'Brien of Moncton, N. B.

Mrs. T. McEachern was organist and Madeline Bridge, guest soloist.

Following the ceremony a reception was held at the Carlisle Hotel to upwards of thirty guests.

The toast to the bride was proposed by Bradford O'Brien and the groom responded. Later the bride and groom left for Montreal and upper Canadian cities. For traveling the bride wore a rose suit of English wool with black accessories. Her corsage was of pink carnations. On their return, they will reside in Moncton where the groom is employed with the Canadian Legion.

The bride has been on the staff of the C. N. R. Regional offices in Moncton for the past five years. She received valuable gifts from regional auditor and staff. Previous to her marriage her many friends and relatives in Moncton and Woodstock tendered her a Should MAN live as long as an Elephant?

In proportion to the time required to attain maturity, man's life-span is briefier than that of many animals. Scientists declare that we humans should rightfully reach an average age of one hundred years. Belatedly, they are centering increased attention upon the problems of old age.

Not only should man live longer, but he should live a richer, more abundant life, free from the many hampering ills common to advancing years.

Already, medical science has done much to make middle-age and the sunset-time of life a pleasanter and more productive period. You owe it to yourself and family to take full advantage of the aids that are now becoming more readily available.
