Bungalow Camps—In the Canadian Pacific Rockies

BANFF—LAKE WINDERMERE

GOD made the Rockies. Man made the cars. And now both the mountains and the cars can get together for one hundred spectacular miles on the Banff-Lake Windermere Automobile Road.

Fourteen years ago, the country wasn't surveyed. Even today you pass scores of unnamed and unclimbed peaks. And all about, within range of your kodak, there's big game—sheep, goat, deer, bear.

Four Bungalow Camps on this Road—Storm Mountain with a superlative view—Vermilion River Crossing, in the heart of the game country—Sindair Hot Springs beyond the Iron Gates—and Lake Windermere in a lovely lake-land, with the Lake of the Hanging Glacier for an astounding side-trip.

You can hire a car at Banff or Lake Louise, or go down the Road by motor-touring bus.

Marriage Scales
THE LAST STRAW

Charles was unusually trying. He arrived late from the golf club and refused to dress for dinner. Mariana, serenely beautiful in lemon-tinted lace, regarded his baggy knicker and crumpled sport shirt with disfavor. Also, she reminded him that he might as well take the time to change, at the risk of losing the new chef, since they were booked to attend the Fillmore's dance with Alan and Linda Harrington.

"Oh, gosh," grumbled Charles. "do we have to go out this evening?"

"It will be the first time this week that you haven't gone to bed at nine o'clock," Mariana reminded his lolly.

"Oh well!" Charles stamped up stairs resentfully.

Mariana wandered restlessly about the library, knowing, with a housekeeper's sixth sense, what was probably taking place in the kitchen regions where the temperamental new chef held sway.

After what seemed eons, Charles finally made his appearance. The afternoon in the spring wind had whipped up a fine brick color in his always ruddy face. To Mariana's critical eyes, he looked positively purple in contrast to the immaculate whiteness of his dress shirt. A couple of cocktails heightened this effect considerably.

Mariana thought, disagreeably, how much she detested blond men. She wished she had married a Spaniard.

Over the excellent soup, Charles regained his accustomed jovial good humor.

"I say, Mariana, I've been thinking over what you just said about my going to bed so early. It's a shame to leave you on your own in this way. We'll have to don't go out. We'll have to give some parties here at the house. I've got a great idea for one, anyway."

Mariana looked dubious.

"Some of your peculiar friends, I suppose," she said coldly.

"Well, it's to entertain that fellow I mentioned the other day—the one I met at the golf club, you know, and liked so well. He's a devil of a nice chap," Charles began to wax enthusiastic. "I'd like him to meet some of our friends here. He'll all right. All the women fall for him."

"I detest lady-killers," murmured Mariana.

"But, listen, this chap isn't that sort at all! He's a real he-man. Besides, he's a celebrity. Everybody's fighting to entertain him, but he doesn't give a darn."

Mariana felt an intuitive twinge. "Who is this man?"

"Craig Cullam, the actor, who's playing at the National Theatre." Mariana's heart fluttered, but some instinct warned her to say icily, "I have never been in the habit of entertaining actors, Charles."

"But Cullam is a fine, clean-cut fellow," protested Charles. "Probably has just as good blood in his veins as we have."

"Why not entertain him at the club, since you are so fond of him. I do not care to be hostess to matinee idols."

Charles' face took on a deeper shade.

"Oh, I say, Mariana, can't you do anything I ask? Oblige me this once, honey, you won't regret it. Cullam's been mighty nice to me."

Mariana considered. She dreaded the day when she should meet her ideal and find that he was a mere mortal. But it was inevitable that the day would come, since all her friends seemed to be crazy about him. Some of them would manage to lure him from his self-imposed exile from society, and it might as well be Charles as anyone. So she said wearily.

"Oh, well, if you must have him, I'll try to arrange it."

"Good girl!" Charles fairly glowed.

can't help it." And encouraged by her unexpected surrender to his wishes, Charles rose, came around the table, and put his arms about her.

A sudden repulsion swept over Mariana. Fumbling for the wisp of handkerchief in the bodice of her gown, she pushed him from her and rose from the table. Without a word she left the room.

Blindly, she groped her way up to her room and flung herself on a couch. She wept, stormily, angrily. Ever so often, she stopped and listened for Charles' pursuing footsteps. But he didn't come.

She realized, with a fresh burst of sobs, that he was finishing his dinner. Food meant more to him than when he did come finally, it was to tell her that the Harringtons had arrived to pick them up for the dance.

She refused to go. He tried to coax her. He went down on his knees beside the couch and endeavored to take her in his arms.

She pushed him away and went into her bath to bathe her reddened eyes. When she finally went down to the impatiently waiting Harringtons, he was cheerfully discussing golf scores with Allan.

It was the last time Mariana ever cried over marriage. After that Charles, his interests, life itself, ceased to interest her.

Woman's Secret Charm

In perfect health lies the secret of woman's charm which makes her radiate cheer and happiness wherever she goes. No one enjoys listening to the aches, pains and woes of an ailing, nervous irritable woman, and her condition is plainly stamped upon every feature. The most effective remedy for woman's ailments ever discovered has proved to be Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Women are soon restored to health by its use and acquire the charm that health alone can give.

Mechanics Became Human Torches

(Canadian Press.)

WINDSOR, N. S., June 11.—Fred Thompson and Charles Hayes, local mechanics, became human torches today when the hose on a gasoline lamp with which they were working became disconnected and sprayed them with gasoline. The clothes of both became ignited and they ran into the street a mass of flames. By rolling in the sand they managed to save themselves from burning until help arrived and both were taken to the hospital in a critical condition.
