NOTRE DAME DE LOURDES

This famous shrine will be seen at part of the reel. A most realistic description throughout. New Wonderland tonight, as it forms part of the Pyrenees, a world wide picture of this picturesque land. This is an opportunity to see the most known and greatest shrine in the universe, to see the spot where such marvelous miracles have been worked, and where the world meets as an equal all asking for some favor to be obtained from the patroness of the shrine. The rest of the picture is superb in its description, and an old fashioned bull fight in the arena is twice and successively defeated the Germans and Belgians. His "Commentaries," familiar to students, record his movements during this period. Much difficulty was experienced by Caesar in subduing the Gauls, owing to the great power of the Druids. While Caesar was engaged in Gaul his enemies were busy in Rome. They plotted against him, and in B. C. 52 ordered him to discharge his soldiers. They also drove many leaders from the city. These fled to Caesar's camp and implored him to come forward as the protector of the violated rights of the people. After some hesitation Caesar consented and marched against Rome. The die was cast; Pompeius, terrified from his apathy and careless confidence, did not await him in the capital, but fled with his troops to Epirus. Caesar entered Rome, took possession of the state treasure, and then moved against Pompeius, who after several engagements was finally forced to transfer his soldiers to Caesar. On his return Caesar conquered Massilia and then proceeded to Rome, where he was proclaimed dictator in B. C. 48. In the three succeeding years Caesar won many victories in Egypt and Africa, and on his return to Rome was hailed as the "Father of his Country," and chosen dictator for life. The common people and soldiers he sought to win by his liberality and the more powerful by tempting offices. He gradually became the recognized head of the Roman people.

Macedonia and Cassius committed suicide. Caesar Augustus, a grandson of a sister of Julius Caesar, assumed command of the army and formed a triumvirate with Antony and Lepidus. A reign of terror followed in which many of the patriotic leaders were executed. Kinship, filial piety disappeared. Cicero was one of the first victims. After the death of Caesar, the republic gradually weakened. Marc Antony's extravagance and dissipation caused his downfall and the power of Caesar Augustus grew. In B. C. 30, only fourteen years after Caesar's death, there came a change. The civil wars had carried off the able and patriotic men; the surviving populace demanded only bread and circuses. It was therefore not difficult for the clever Caesar Augustus to transform the republic into an empire. It was done gradually, and under the empire Rome again became a power in literature and art.
