UNSUITABLE CLOTHING LOWERS EFFICIENCY

Do you realize the important effect your working clothes may have on the effectiveness of your work? asks a writer in New Health Magazine. Do you study the clothes you wear in relation to your job, so that your efficiency may not be lowered through unsuitable clothing? Clothing has both a psychological and physiological effect which may be of the greatest importance in relation to health and efficiency.

Some time ago an examination was made of the feet and shoes of 97 women working in a department store. Thirty-seven women had foot trouble or foot strain, 43 wore shoes that were too short, 49 wore heels that upset the body balance, 19 wore heels so high as to be injurious to the rest of the body and 59 wore shoes that fitted so badly that they distorted the feet.

If one is engaged on a job which requires a lot of walking and standing about, it surely is an elementary principle that one should take special care to select comfortable, well-fitting shoes. Yet the above example, which depicts a typical state of affairs among women workers such as, for example, store assistants, waitresses or hospital nurses, shows how rare shoe wisdom is.

LONDON'S BEST SELLERS.

Books on kingship and the Coronation, for adults and for boys and girls, are best sellers today in London.

Baroness Eugenie de Rothschild, hostess to the Duke of Windsor at the Castle of Enzenfeld near Vienna, but just bought a new spring hat made entirely of ribbon. This toque, from Caroline Reboux, is made entirely of three cockades of ribbon in three different colors. The cockades are stitched upon a tulle foundation which matches exactly the blonde hair of the Baroness de Rothschild, who, by the way, is an American from Philadelphia.

Mrs. Harison Williams, New York socialite, has ordered a new ribbon hat from Sway, the milliner of the Duchess of Kent. This is a turban with a black foundation trimmed with bands of purple and red ribbon which are knotted in back with fringed streamers hanging loosely behind.

THE COOK'S CORNER

PARKER HOUSE ROLLS

(30 rolls) Two cups scalded milk, 3 tablespoons butter, 2 tablespoons granulated sugar, 2 teaspoons salt, 1 cake compressed yeast, 1-4 cup lukewarm water, 1 to 2 cups bread flour (about 6 cups).

Scald milk, add shortening, sugar and salt. When cooled to lukewarm, add yeast which has been dissolved in water. Sift in about 2-3 of the total quantity of flour and beat well. Let stand until it rises to double the original bulk. Add remaining flour and knead well. Let rise again until double in bulk. Roll dough to thickness of 1-4 inch. Cut with biscuit cutter (3 inches in diameter), brush each piece with melted butter and crease each roll through the centre with dull edge of knife. Fold over double, pinch edges together, and place on well greased pan, 1 inch apart. Allow to rise until double in bulk, then brush tops of rolls with melted butter. Bake in hot oven (425 deg. F.) for about 15 minutes, until done.

That quantity of 30 may seem large at first but wait until the family gets wind of these hot "cakes." And there's always tomorrow.

WHOLEWHEAT NUT ROLLS

(15 rolls)

One and three-quarters tablespoons sugar, 1-2 teaspoon salt, 1 cake compressed yeast, 2 1-8 cups water, 1 egg, 3 cups bread flour, 2 cups wholewheat flour, 1-4 tablespoons melted butter, chopped walnuts.

Use a large bowl, mix sugar and salt. Crumble yeast cake and add. Beat egg well and combine with the lukewarm water. Slowly stir into mixture in bowl. Sift, then measure bread flour and add to wholewheat flour. Beat 1-2 of flour into yeast mixture, add melted butter, then beat in the remaining flour. Stand in warm place until it rises to double in bulk. Grease muffin tins, pinch off pieces of dough and half fill the muffin tins. Brush the tops of the rolls with melted butter and stand until they rise to double in bulk. Bake in hot oven (425 deg. F.) for about 20 minutes. Brush again with melted butter and dust with chopped nut meals. Return to oven for a few minutes. They are good eating, especially with some of grandmother's crisp apple jelly.

Family Ties Still Strong

You May Think That Families Make No Difference in Marriage, But Neither Boy Nor Girl Can Forget Former Environments

A young man who belongs to a fine and cultured family that for generations has stood for the things that are the most admirable in humanity has fallen in love with a pretty girl who was born and reared "on the wrong side of the tracks" as the phrase goes, and whose people are uneducated, shiftless and thriftless and given to drunken brawls. Naturally, the boy's parents object strenuously to the match. "But, says the enamored youth, "I am a marrying Rosie. I am not marrying her family."

This is a mistake into which those who have had no personal experience of matrimony often fall. Nothing is more common than to hear a boy say, "I can't stand Mary's sloppy old mother, but, thank Heaven, I am not marrying Mary's family." Or a girl will say, "John's family are just perfectly awful, my dear, but I am not marrying them, praise be."

But after John and Mary get married they find, to their surprise and consternation, that they are not more firmly wedded to each other than they are to each other's families; that nothing but death or the divorce court can part them from each other's parents, sisters, brothers, cousins, aunts and all the afflictions and drawbacks that go with them.

Of course, the men and women who marry into families below them think that to separate their wives and husbands from their own people is as simple as it is to pluck the one perfect flower from a straggly bush and ride away and forget all about the plant that bore it, but family ties are not so brittle as that, nor are family obligations so easily evaded.

Because John Poorman marries into the aristocratic De Verre family doesn't make her callously indifferent as to whether her family starve or not, or less anxious to give her old parents a few luxuries and to send a pretty sister a new dress and to help a wild brother out of trouble.

So Miss De Verre finds that, after all, she has married her husband's family and unless she alienates his affections from her completely she has to make his people as welcome in their home as her own, and send the baby as often to see Grandma Poorman as she does Grandmother Millionbucks. The rich man discovers that when he married the poor girl he also married her family and took them on to support.

Furthermore, every one who takes a husband or wife not only marries their families but also all that they have done and been for centuries. All of us are what heredity and environment have made us. Our traits of character come down to us through long lines of ancestors. Our principles, our points of view, our habits, our manners and our morals are what our fathers and mothers taught us.

If parents have a high code of conduct that they live up to; if they are broad-minded and just and generous; if they are honest and honorable; if they are industrious and ambitious, ninety-nine times out of a hundred their children will be that way, too, and save matrimonial bets. Good families to marry. But a man or woman is taking a long shot at happiness who marries a woman or man whose family tree has borne only rotten fruit.

Hence the young should quit deluding themselves with the fallacy that when they marry they only marry the individual, not his or her family. John marries Mary's mother's virtues or her faults; her culture, her thriftiness, her unselfishness, OR her ignorance, her slovenliness, her loose morals. Mary marries John's father's good qualities or his bad; his courage, his uprightness, his chivalry, OR his meanness, his stinginess, his belief that a wife is nothing but an unpaid servant who calls for no consideration.

And inasmuch as this is true and that when you marry you marry the whole family, it is just as important to pick out the kind of family you desire for life companions as it is to choose the individual man or woman you want for a husband or wife.

Honeymoon Mountain

By Frances Shelley Wees

(Continued) "So now," Tubby said, eying him, when it does not look as if it might be so fine, you feel responsible? Is that it? Is that why you're throwing yourself away like a sack of soft potatoes?"

Bryn sighed. "I do wish you'd go and change your clothes," he said. "You can't be best man in a white tie and tails, not when I'm wearing a lounge suit. We'd probably have another earthquake."

"And what about Pilar?" "Pilar?" "Pilar D'Avilio? What about her?"

"Well, what about her?" "For two years you've carted her around. She's had a smile for the last 23 months like a mouse in a cheese-barrel. Everybody thinks you're going to marry her. She'll go blooey when she hears this. Have you told her anything at all?"

"How could I tell her? I wasn't sure myself until two hours ago, when I telephoned you. I couldn't telephone her, could I Hello, Pilar, I'm going to marry a girl in a few minutes. And there's no reason why I should. I've never asked her to marry me, or even hinted about it."

"Well, I don't have to tell her, do I?" "That's a bright idea," Bryn said happily. Thank's, old man. I'll do the same for you one of these days."

"What'll happen," Tubby said miserably, "is that she'll have me marrying her myself."

"Well that's all right," Bryn assured him. "You've always wanted to, anyway. Now, on your way, Tubby. Go and get dressed. Burch will bring you your cocktail, and lend you one of his shirts and a collar. You can wear my pants if you're careful not to take a deep breath, but I don't think you'd better try buttoning the coat. All in keeping... she'll think you got them second hand."

"Marry Pilar?" "Certainly. She's just the wife for you. There's the blood of the conquistadores in Pilar. I'll take that to keep you from getting any fatter. Go on. You've only got five minutes."

Twenty-three years previously, Anne Whitaker Larned had eloped, on the morning of the day of her wedding to Courtney Graham, and had married a young man, who had been a woman, would never have been received in the society in which the Larneds moved. The consequences were disastrous. The young man had no money, but he had expected to have a great deal

IF YOUR TOOTH PASTE DOESN'T FIGHT "PINK TOOTH BRUSH"...

Switch to IPANA

Gums must be healthy for teeth to be sound—Keep gums firm, teeth clean with Ipana and Massage

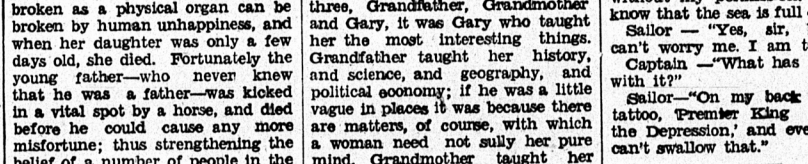

Any dentist will tell you that you can't have lovely teeth and lovely smiles without having firm, healthy gums, too. Because teeth are seldom white and sparkling when gums are soft and under-nourished. And failure to care for those tender, sensitive gums often results in "pink tooth brush" and other dental disorders.

"Pink tooth brush" is a serious warning. Never ignore it—never dismiss as trifling that "tinge of pink." When you see it—see your dentist promptly. It can mean trouble—serious gum disorder. But usually it only means gums robbed of exercise and work—victims of our modern diet of soft super-refined foods—gums that will quickly respond to the healthful stimulation of Ipana and massage.

For Ipana is a double-duty tooth paste, designed not only to clean the teeth but to aid in massaging the gums. Rub a little extra Ipana onto your gums every time you brush your teeth; you will soon notice improvement. Lazy gums awaken as circulation stimulates the tissues.

Switch to Ipana and massage today. Try it for a month and see if you don't find your gums firmer, teeth whiter, and your smile more attractive.

A Morning Smile

HARD TO SWALLOW Captain — "You bathed here without my permission. Don't you know that the sea is full of sharks?" Sailor — "Yes, sir, but sharks can't worry me. I am tattooed." Captain — "What has that to do with it?"

Sailor — "On my back I have in tattoo, Premier King has ended the Depression," and even a shark can't swallow that."

I had used Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription only a short while when it helped me wonderfully. The nausea no longer troubled me and the headaches and pain disappeared." New size, tabs. 50c.
