KING EAGLE BECOMES WORRIED

From next to nothing worry springs
And feeds and grows on little things.
—Old Mother Nature.

King Eagle, perched on a great rock on the top of the Great Mountain, was looking over the tops of the nearest trees, over the Green Forest lower down, over the Green Meadows and the Old Pasture, over the Big River, clear to the Purple Hills. The distance made them purple to other eyes, but not to his, for the eyes of King Eagle are far-seeing eyes. He was looking at what to most folks in his place would have seemed a large part of the Great World. Of course, it wasn't really, but it was more of it than most folks ever see with just their own eyes.

Presently from a dead tree on the mountainside below him Mrs. Eagle flew up to join him. They were a noble pair, those two great feathered folk sitting side by side on the big rock on top of the Great Mountain, great only in name and in comparison with the surrounding hills and the flat land below. Their heads were snowy white. Their tails were just as white. Their big, yellow, hooked bills gave them dignity and a look of fierceness that commanded the respect of all the smaller folk and of some who were not smaller.

"My dear," said King Eagle, "I don't like it. Indeed I don't. If it keeps on I shall begin to worry."

Mrs. Eagle started her yellow eyes at him. "You sound as if you are already worrying. What are you worrying about?" she said.

"I'm not really worrying, but I am a little anxious. One can be anxious without really worrying you know," replied King Eagle.

"All right. All right. You're anxious, but not worrying. What about?" retorted Mrs. Eagle. "She is a little bigger than he."

"The dry weather," replied King Eagle.

Mrs. Eagle lifted her great wings enough for the Merry Little Breezes to play hide-and-seek under them and cool her off while doing it. "It is dry," she agreed, "but what of it? There always is dry weather in summer and later before the first snow."

"But so much of it," replied King Eagle. "There has been no rain, not even one little shower for so long that the Green Meadows and the Green Forest are drying up. Look down there, my dear, where Laughing Brook leaves the Green Forest to cross the Green Meadow on the way to join the Big River. It hasn't been for many days. There is hardly water enough to call it a brook. And see those banks of mud along the Big River. The water should be over them and it hasn't been for days and days. The Green Meadows are brown, not green, and all leaves on the trees of the Green Forest are drying and falling. The ground is so dry that plants that should be green are brown or yellow and drying up. Jerry Muskrat and Mrs. Jerry have had to leave their house in the Smiling Pool because the water in it is so low that it no longer covers the doorway and so the house isn't safe for them."

"Where are they living?" asked Mrs. Eagle.

"In their other house in the bank where the water is deepest but that won't be safe if this weather keeps on much longer," replied King Eagle.

"My dear, you are worrying," said Mrs. Eagle lifting her wings a little higher. "You certainly are worrying. But why should you? What is there for us to worry about? As long as we can get food without too much trouble, and the dryer the weather the easier it is to get some things, there is nothing for us to worry about. Let other folks do the worrying. We can always fly away if it becomes uncomfortable around here. So why worry?"

"I'm not thinking of us. We will be safe whatever happens. I'm thinking of those who can't get away if it"—King Eagle paused to stare anxiously toward the distant hills.

"If what?" prompted Mrs. Eagle.

"If the Red Terror should come," replied King Eagle. He meant fire.

DAILY CRYPTOQUOTE—Here's how to work it:
A X Y D L B A A X R

One letter simply stands for another. In this example A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophes, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.
