Happenings Of The Week

During the first half of her three weeks' stay in London, Mrs. Roosevelt will be the personal guest of the King and Queen. Mrs. Roosevelt is no stranger to London As a girl she attended Allenswood Finishing School near London. Later she and Mr. Roosevelt visited London on their honey-moon, and after the First Great War, when Mr. Roosevelt was Assistant Seretary of the Navy, she accompanied him to London on a military mission and visited battlegrounds over which hard fighting had occurred not six weeks before. Mrs. Roosevelt's travelling costume was a point that reporters were quick to note. She wore a long black coat trimmed with blue fox and a cherry red hat adorned with green feathers. The King was dressed in the uniform of a Marshal of the R. A. F. Mrs. Hobby crossed the Atlantic in the same plane with Mrs. Roosevelt. While in England the director of the WAACS will study the activities of British women in war organizations. It was announced that for safety reasons no report on where Mrs. Roosevelt spends her nights will be made until fifteen minutes after she has left.

Mrs. Roosevelt sat next to the King. Other guests included Lord Louis Mountbatten, head of the Commandos, Lady Mountbatten, United States' Ambassador John G. Winant, Prime Minister and Mrs. Winston Churchill, Field Marshal Jan Christiaan Smuts, Prime Minister of the Union of South Africa, and his son, Captain Jacobus Smuts, Lieutenant-Colonel Elliott Roosevelt's and Mrs. Roosevelts secretary, Malvina Thompson.

It is not generally known that the late Duke of Kent devoted some of his time on official journeys to knitting for seamen of the merchant navy. This has just been revealed by Lady Myrtle Balfour, a daughter of Admiral Lord Jellicoe. The Duke invariably knitted chest and kidney protectors for which the men who wore them were most grateful. The workmanship was very good. Lady Myrtle Balfour thinks if the Duke could find time for such labours during his manifold activities many other men might do the same. It would be interesting to know how far knitting is now a masculine accomplishment.

Q. What is the restriction on the use of malt by brewers?

A. A brewer must not use any more malt for producing beer in any quarter of the year, than he used in the same quarter of the year before. This restriction is expected to make a considerable saving in manpower.

Q. I bought a coat which I thought was seal but my husband says its rabbit. Shouldn't consumers be protected from buying goods which are not the quality that are represented to be?

A. You will be glad to know that Order A-443 of October 14 states that fur coats, jackets, capes scarfs or muffs must be labelled with the correct fur name; garments made of paws, necks, tails; bellies or other piece of fur must be labelled to give that information and advertisements must give it in the same size type as that of the name of the fur.

Q. Can I buy eggs from my neighbor who has hens or do I have to buy them from the store?

A. Your neighbor is considered a farmer so he may sell directly to the consumer but he must maintain the price ceiling.

Dorothy Dix Says—

RAISING CHILDREN PROPERLY JOB FOR BOTH PARENTS

United Front Needed — Qualities Of Two Complement Each Other

DEAR MISS DIX—Which parent, the father or mother, should rear the children in a family in which there are both boys and girls?

T. M. C.

ANSWER—It takes both a father and mother, working together, to bring up a family properly. It is a two-handed job that is too much for either a man or a woman to accomplish alone.

Children need a mother's love and tenderness, sympathy and understanding. They need her continuous physical care for their personal needs. They need a mother to kiss the spot and make it well when they get hurt. A mother to whom they can run for bread and jam when they are hungry. A mother to see that they are wrapped up when it is cold, and that they have dry shoes on when they come in when it is raining.

A mother to tuck them in bed at night and say to them those last few words that sink into their subconscious minds and that determine the kind of men and women they are going to be when they are grown, and what they will do twenty, thirty, forty years later in some crisis in their lives.

And they need a father to provide for them, a father to discipline them, a father to be firm with them, a father to whom they can look up as a fountain of wisdom. No man, no matter how hard he tries, can take a mother's place to his children. He has his work to do and can't be with them all day as their mother could, and when he is with them he doesn't know how to do the thousand little things for them that a mother does. There are no more piteous spectacles than that of men trying awkwardly and ineffectually to mother their motherless little broods.

FATHER NEEDED TOO

Nor can any woman take a father's place, especially with boys. There comes a time when every boy outgrows his mother and when he has a contempt for her opinion and defies her authority. Later on when he is a grown man he may revere her wisdom, but there is an age when every boy thinks that all women are fools because they don't know a baseball king's batting average and can't tell the make of every automobile at sight.

But the boy respects his father because he knows the things that the boy is interested in. He is physically stronger than the boy and can enforce his commands instead of using moral suasion. Women are nearly always too strict or too lenient with boys' and widows' sons are generally sissies or hellions.

There should never be any conflict of authority between parents in rearing their children. They should present a united front, and there should be no appeal from mother's verdict to father's. Matters in which the parents disagree should be discussed privately and some concerted plan of action agreed upon.

Lucky the children whose parents are broad-minded enough to do this and to give their youngsters the benefit of their combined wisdom.

ENTITLED TO NIGHT OUT

DEAR MISS DIX—My husband and I have solved the amusement problem in this way: One night a week he stays at home and takes care of the baby while I go to a show with a lady friend, and one night a week he goes out and stays as late as he pleases. Now when he goes out it is all right, but when I come back at about eleven o'clock, the first greeting I get is: "Here, take your kid. I'm worn out with him, and I am not going to stay in with him again."

And because my husband is so cross I can't tell him about the show.

HALLOWE'EN

O Hallowe'ens of long ago,
How very far away,
Seem those hours of enchantment
When we were young and gay.

A golden jack-o-lantern
Through the twilight brightly gleams
And the laughter of the children
Wakens old delightful dreams . . .

There were so many startling things
Our childish eyes might see,
For elves and goblins walked abroad
On that strange enchanted eve.

We wore such funny costumes
On that gay and happy night,
And the masks upon our faces
Were a weird and fearsome sight.

And our childish belief in witches,
And black cats with yellow eyes,
Who would ride upon their broomsticks
High across the midnight skies.

And the fun we had at parties,
Noisy mirth and voices sweet
Gay and happy childish laughter
Set in tune with dancing feet.

O the magic days of childhood
When we knew no care or sigh,
O the olden golden hours,
Of the Hallowe'ens gone by.

Constance I. Heckbert.

Apple Race: For this game two teams of equal numbers are formed. Each team then divides in half and form parallel lines, teammates facing each other. Give all contestants a toothpick and place an apple before the first runner of each team. The toothpick must be held in the mouth and the apple pushed to the teammate on opposite side who returns it to the other side. Number 2 having stepped up to front of line. Number 2 returns it to second teammate who returns it to the player next the person from whom he received it Thus passing the apple from player to player on opposite lines until the end of the column has been reached and the apple has been returned to the front of the parallel line again If the toothpick breaks the runner must start over The victors receive a box of "goblin teeth" (Marshmallows)

Witch's Hunt: Cut a number of cats, bats and owls out of cardboard and hide them around the room before the party begins The players march around in a circle while music is played. When the music stops the players find as many cats, bats, and owls as they can. When the music begins again all must stop hunting and march in the circle until the music stops again. The game continues until all the cutouts have been found. Cats count one point, bats count three points, and the owls count five points. Person having the most points is declared the winner.

Skull Ball: Guests sit or stand in a circle. One of the players is the witch and stands in the centre. Someone in the circle has a ball painted to look like a skull. At the starting signal the skull is passed around or across the circle rapidly. If the one in the centre catches the ball while it is in the air, the person who threw it becomes the witch and takes the place in the centre. If the witch can touch the skull while it is still in some player's hand, that player becomes the witch.

After refreshment have been served by a staff of ghost-waiters and waitresses, a sing-song by the light of a huge artificial moon hung on the wall above the piano will be very much enjoyed.

HINTS ON ETIQUETTE

It is not in good taste for a printed card of condolence to be sent to a family after a death. A personally written note should be sent. It is rather hard to write, and it should not be too sentimental.

BUTTER IN SANDWICHES

When buttering bread for sandwiches remember that soft butter spreads farther than hard butter. By adding milk it can be made to spread even farther. Cream a pound of butter thoroughly adding gradually. When the mixture is of the consistency of whipping cream it is fine for spreading. Use a spatula or wide bladed knife for quick spreading, and spread bread slices thinly.

WIPING GREASE PANS

Old newspapers are handy for wipping greasy pots and pans before you pop them into rich grease-dissolving suds that give them a nice polish Cut the papers into seven-inch squares and spike them on a nail near the kitchen sink.

FAMILY DESSERT

When having hot biscuits or muffins for the family dinner, serve a favorite conserve or preserve along with an extra pan of hot biscuits and there is no necessity or desire for any other dessert

HALLOWE'EN SOCIAL

Once again the season of ghosts and goblins, skeletons and black cats, pumpkins and spider's webs, open graves and careening bats has rolled around. This particular time of the year is the season in which revelry and harmless fun provoking pranks are the order of the day. The harvests have been gathered in, and everyone is settling down to a season of social activity among friends, thankful for all the bounteous gifts of nature and happy in the knowledge that for another year the needs of their fellow-citizens will be supplied.

A Morning Smile

APOLOGY PLUS

They had been invited to dinner at the house of a prominent local resident. As there was no one to look after little Tommy, it was necessary to take him, too. The meal started off well enough but while Tommy was trying to cut the meat on his plate it slipped onto the floor and his mother's face flushed. "Tommy," she whispered tensely, "you must apology to Mrs. Ayres at once. Get up and say something quickly." The child slowly picked the meat from the floor and said: "Im sorry Mrs. Ayres. It's funny but tough meat always does 'o that."

Great excitement reigned in the village. They'd had their first bomb during the night. Fortunately it had fallen in a field, the only damage being a large crater.

The place was swarming with relic hunters, searching for bits of bomb as sourvenirs. Practically everybody was there —and the rest were on their way. All save one. A dear old lady sat outside her cottage and called cheery greetings to her neighbos hastening past.

"Aren't you coming to get a souvenir, Mrs. Jones?" asked one.

"No," was the placid reply. "It's a bit far for me pore feet. I'll just wait till a bomb drops nearer.

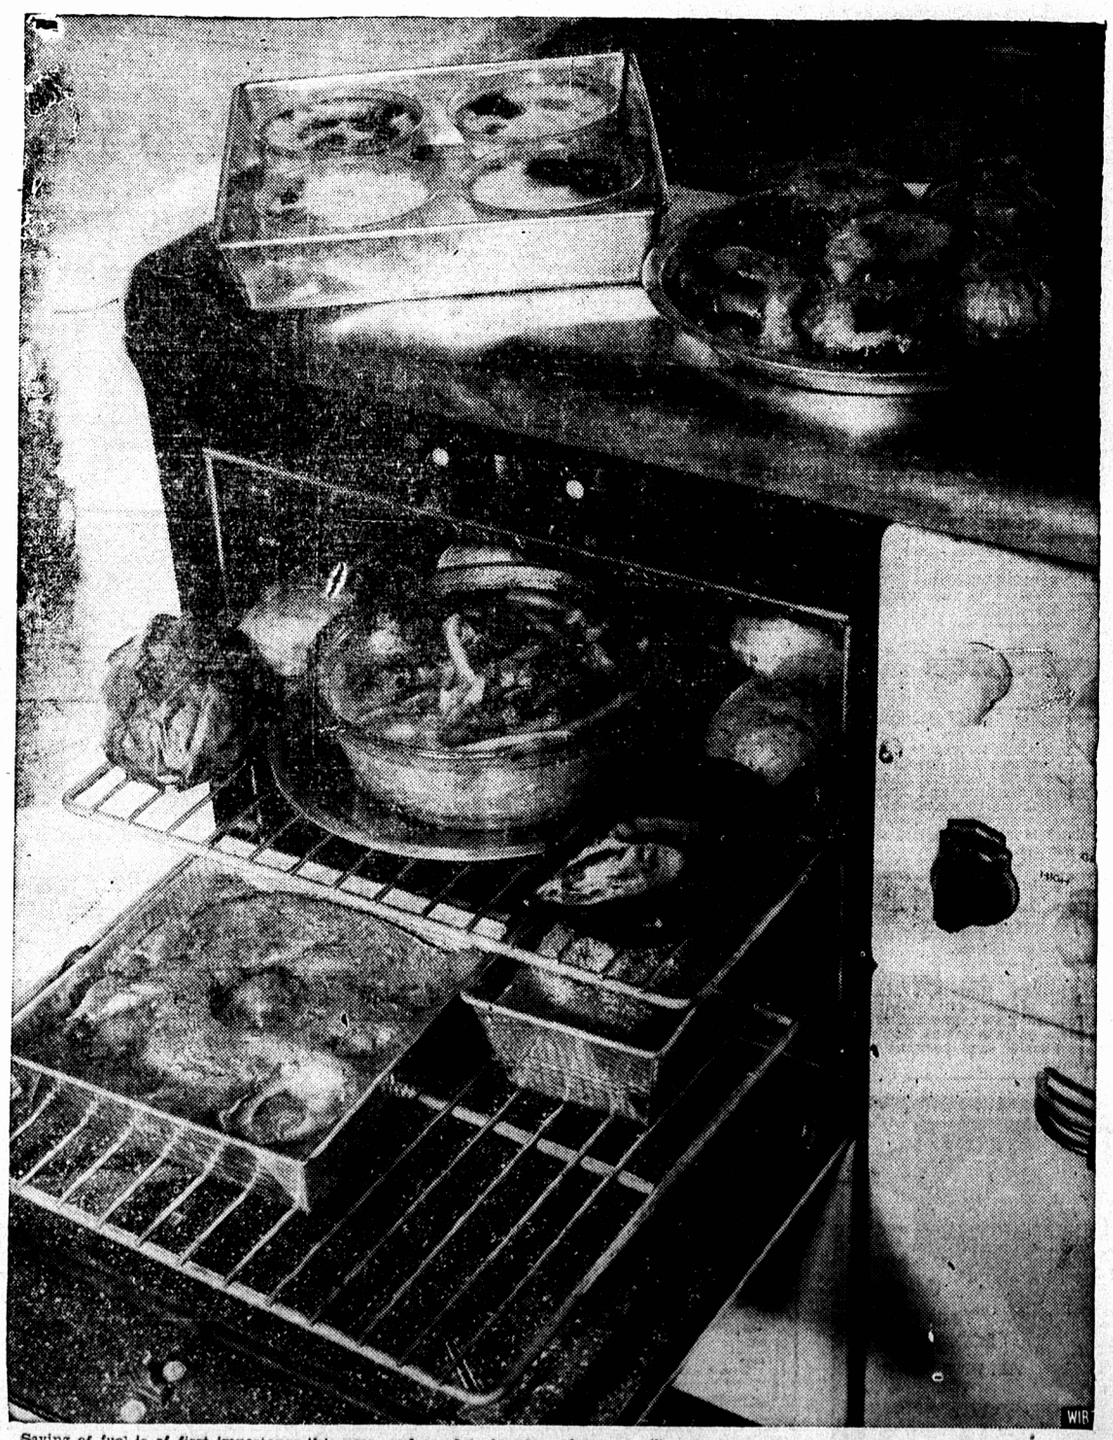
Careful Meal Planning Saves Fuel And Power



Saving of fuel is of first importance this year, and careful planning of menus will make it possible to cook dishes for several meals at one time. In planning all-oven meals the choice of dishes will depend on the temperature required by the dish that needs the longest cooking time In this meal, prepared in the experimental kitchens of the Consumer Section of the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa, the braised oxtails took two and a half hours at a tmeperature of 325-350 degrees; so custards, apples, a loaf cake and an apple upside down cake were baked during the two and a half hour period, as well as potatoes and pepper squash. For satisfactory baking results there must be free circulation of air in the oven, so avoid having baking tins touching one another. Careful planning of meals to make maximum use of cooking facilities will result in substantial savings of power or fuel and a consequent reduction in household bills
