That Body of Yours
By James W. Barton, M.D.
LARGE MEALS MAY CAUSE ATTACKS OF ANGINA PECTORIS
A professor of medicine died a few months ago at the age of 80. When he was about 45 years of age he discovered that he had heart disease and would have to live a careful life if he was to live at all. Comparing himself to a bridge that had been able to carry 10 ton but could not carry only 5 ton, he endeavored to do his work at half his usual speed. The result was that he saved or prolonged his life by over 35 years.
Now, doing your work at half speed does not refer to physical work alone but to all the daily body processes and particularly to the eating and digesting of food.
Dr. G. Werley, El Paso, Texas, in Southwestern Medicine in discussing angina—pain under the breast bone—and hardening of the blood vessels carrying blood from the heart to all parts of the body and to the heart muscle itself, says that many cases are due to allergy—being sensitive to various substances—and, in some cases, this sensitiveness combined with nervousness. However, these attacks of angina may be a blessing in disguise in that they call attention to what would be a dangerous or fatal condition if the individual were to be careless about his daily life habits.
"The presence of angina is a signal of danger that if heeded and followed by correction, especially of bad eating habits, may actually prolong life and thus be advantageous."
I have spoken before of the man past seventy, all of whose brothers had died in their early fifties. When asked why he was so fortunate as to be alive at his advanced age, he replied "Well, I always had a poor appetite."
Dr. Werley tells us that the chief cause of angina can be traced to what has gone down the gullet (throat).
Another warning is that overweight generally comes from eating too much and especially too much fat, along with which always goes cholesterol (a pearly substance found in fat)—the one important cause of hardening of the walls of the bloodvessels.

PALACE-ON-WHEELS FOR BRITAIN'S RULERS
