HAPPENINGS Of The WEEK

Names of the official staff which will accompany the King and Queen to Canada were announced from Buckingham Palace on February 18. They are: Lady Nuburnholme and Lady Katharine Seymour (Ladies-in-Waiting); the Earl of Eidon (Lords-in-Waiting to the King); the Earl of Arlric (Lord Chamberlain to the Queen); Mr. A. Lascelles (Acting Private Secretary to the King); Surgeon-Captain H. White, R.N. (Medical Officer); Mr. G.F. Stewart (Chief Press Liaison Officer); Captain M. Adeane (Assistant Private Secretary to the King); Lieut.-Colonel the Hon. Piers Legh (Esquire to the King); Commander E.M.C. Abel-Smith, R.N. (Esquire to the King).

Lady Bridget Elliot, eldest daughter of the Earl and Countess of Minto, was presented to Their Majesties the King and Queen at the Court of March 15, by her mother, Lady Minto. Lady Bridget made her debut at the Duke of Buccleuch's Hunt Ball, held at Floors Castle, Kelso, Scotland, in January.

Glenn only is Lady Beesborough's preference in the choice of vases for flowers. The former chateaine of Rideau Hall, now living in England, uses tanks of round tables and round glass bowls elsewhere. A low container holds short-stemmed orchids in her green-walled drawing-room in Eskdale-square, London. Another of her interesting ideas is to group arm lilies with silver-grey "pussy" palm in a tall tank. Black candles appear to lead to Beesborough, who has chosen a decorative mantelpiece scheme with these candles inserted in tall gilt candlesticks.

The Lieut. Governor, Hon. G.D. DeBios extended hospitality to the Members of the Legislature and other friends last Monday evening when he entertained at dinner at Government House.

Mrs. G.D. DeBios, wife of the Lieut. Governor, accompanied by her daughter, Miss Helen DeBios, left Wednesday on a holiday trip to Nassau, Jamaica, and Bermuda, sailing from New York.

Miss Norah Longworth left Thursday to join friends in New York on a visit to Florida and Washington for a few weeks.

Mrs. Harold Hemming of London, England, who, with two children, has been spending the past week with Mr. and Mrs. H.K.S. Hemming of this city, leaves this morning to visit her parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Weaver, in Vancouver. During her stay in Charlottetown Mrs. Hemming spoke on the radio on "Writers I Know in International Affairs". She also gave an informal talk for the benefit of the Little Theatre, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. H.J. Palmer, outlining some of her experiences in Berlin during the early days of the Nazi regime in England during the crisis, and lately in Paris, where she had the honour of being received informally by the Duke and Duchess of Windsor, with whom she had some interesting talks.

It was with great regret that some friends learned of the death last week in Banff, Alta., of Mrs. May Nicholson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Eben Stewart, formerly of Charlottetown.

Hon. R.B. Bennett has been selected to England's most distinguished club—the Athenaeum—membership in which is restricted to men of science, literature, the arts and public service. The executive of the club includes Earl Baldwin, the Archbishop of York and Lord Macmillan.

Mrs. Ernest Coffin expects to leave next week for Halifax where she will join her brother-in-law, Mr. Walter Crocker and her sister Mrs. Crocker of Truro, on an extended visit to England. After visiting in London the party will proceed to Paris and on the return home sail from Cherbourg.

STOMACH TROUBLES Often Due To Constipation

One quick aid for an ailing stomach is Dr. Hamilton's Pills. Many people use no other medicine.

"I was a constant sufferer from constipation and sick headaches," writes G. Slater from Calgary, "and for two years felt so sick and miserable I would cheerfully have died. A friend of mine sent me Dr. Hamilton's Pills and they did wonders for me. Indeed they saved my life. They have ended my headaches, given me a fine healthy complexion, increased appetite and have made me well."

Unless You Possess Unusual Tact, Do Not Try to Mold Your Husband to a Pattern Not to His Liking — Men Get Pretty Set in Their Ways by Time They Reach the Marriage Age

Dear Miss Dix—I am just married for the second time, but unless my husband changes our marriage is going on the rocks. He is 24 years old, attractive in a way, has a promising future financially and is crazy about me, thinks everything I do is perfect, but he does not have the charm and personality to go with the type of friends I aspire to. His mannerisms are so repulsive to me that I shudder when I think of them. Now I know that his faults can be overcome because I have made myself over by imitating the conduct and dress and manners of people whom I admired. But, unfortunately, he is the life of the party wherever he goes, happy and jolly. So I don't know how to go about explaining to him that it is all wrong and that he must teach me the right things to do. How can I do this tactfully? Please advise me what to do, as I simply won't put up with these things. I know what I want, of life and I am going to get it.

Answer: Well, I think just at present you will have to decide whether you want to live your tactful way, or, if you are in a fair way of losing him if you put him through the strenuous course of culture that you are planning. By the time a man is old enough to marry, his mode of speech, his mannerisms, his habits, his tastes and opinions are set. Any wife interferes with them at her peril. Women who are more adaptable and who love change, can make themselves over to suit the fashion, or to meet a new condition in life. But the average man can no more be changed than people like him and as it is the life of the party wherever he goes, happy and jolly. So I don't know how to go about explaining to him that it is all wrong and that he must teach me the right things to do. How can I do this tactfully? Please advise me what to do, as I simply won't put up with these things. I know what I want, of life and I am going to get it.

Every day we see syphilis creatures who six months ago were feather beds. We see women who never had a second dress to their backs when they were young because of a six-week trip to Europe with a heavy French accent. And it is a matter of common knowledge that no woman talks so much about their family trees, once they get up a little in the world as those who haven't an education. People like him and as it is the life of the party wherever he goes, happy and jolly. So I don't know how to go about explaining to him that it is all wrong and that he must teach me the right things to do. How can I do this tactfully? Please advise me what to do, as I simply won't put up with these things. I know what I want, of life and I am going to get it.

Dear Miss Dix—Bert and I have been married for a year and a half, and he has been wonderful to me. About six months ago his mother asked us if we would be adopting a little boy about 2 years old. My husband seemed so thrilled over the idea that he consented. We were told the little fellow had been born out of wedlock and his mother thought we would be ideal parents for the child. I fell in love with Sunny the moment I saw him. He was a darling. At my husband's insistence we went away for him. Well, the other day I found out that this boy is my husband's illegitimate child and he just couldn't stand it without his son. So he and his parents fixed up this plan of our adopting the boy, without his mother knowing anything about it. My husband never told me even yet about the other girl, or that this is his son. When I learned of this affair it made me deathly sick and I haven't been able to eat since. I am killing me. But, somehow, I can't tell Bert what's the matter with me. The child's mother lives in this town. What shall I do? Shall I tell Bert that I know his secret?

Answer: No one would dare to advise you about so difficult and intricate a problem as this. You must settle it yourself and be guided by your heart rather than your head. For your head would tell you that your husband and mother have played a sly trick upon you and that is a deathly unforfeitable. It would tell you that the very least that your husband could have done would have been to tell you the truth about the whole matter and ask you if you were willing to make the great sacrifice of taking his illegitimate child and mothering it as if it were your own. That would have been a noble, goodness knows, but it would have shown that he was a man who had the courage to do the honest thing, that he had some consideration for your feelings, and some faith in you being fine enough to rise to the occasion and help him along in a measure for his sin. Instead of doing that he lied to you and deceived you and planned a lifetime of hiding the secret of the child's birth from you.

But your heart will tell you that your husband's affair with the child's mother happened before you were married, and that evidently it is over, or he would have married the mother. Also, your heart will tell you that he had some consideration for your feelings, and some faith in you being fine enough to rise to the occasion and help him along in a measure for his sin. Instead of doing that he lied to you and deceived you and planned a lifetime of hiding the secret of the child's birth from you.

CHRISTABEL

By PEARL BELLAIRS

"What you say about the difficulty of moral guilt is perfectly true, Christabel went on, with a mixture of shyness and courage. "I was sentenced for something of which I wasn't morally guilty—something of which I was morally incapable, in fact. I thought I had been wrongfully convicted. And yet when I came out of prison I attempted to do something which was morally much more vile." She glanced at Hewitson "than anything they had sentenced me for!" Hewitson made a slight, emphatic gesture with his hand and shook his head.

"I suppose you think it strange that I should talk like this to a stranger?" Christabel went on, still addressing Schluster. "But I'm not ashamed. What has happened to me, has happened. One must accept it, include it in one's life, and accept what I mean to do in the future. And if there's any work I could do for this Association, I'll do it at any time I can." Her manner was so sincere and her candour seemed to spring from conviction that neither the other men were moved beyond anything that might have been embarrassing in the situation. After a moment's silence, Schluster said earnestly: "If at any time you feel free to give your assistance to the movement, Miss Collet, then just write to me!"

Hewitson broke in abruptly, in a tone of determination: "Miss Collet insists on making this confession. Harry, I'm bound to add one of my own. Miss Collet was a victim of one of my men in the air. He had come in the days of my youth, the Bar. In fact, since she insists on confessing that she's been to prison, it's absolutely necessary for me to explain that it was I who prosecuted her, and sent her there!"

Professor Schluster was used to acting as factotum, confessor, the course of his work, but he could not for the moment find anything to say. The whole situation left him somewhat in the air. He had said them, severally to the Cafe International, merely for coffee, and found himself the recipient of the most dramatic confidences. He was startled and embarrassed, but flattered—and intensely curious.

"Yes," said Hewitson, breaking into a smile. "It is, isn't it?" "SHALL WE TALK?" They both so obsessed by the subtle pressure that this mutual confession gave them, that neither of them cared very much how staggered the Protestor or Schluster might be by it.

He hesitated, and said at last: "This seems to me most interesting. I've never seen anything like this before. It's a very curious case. I'll discuss the matter; it seems to me to show a great spirit of rationality." "After that," said Hewitson, "I'm sure there's more to be said. The Professor was obviously superstitious, and no longer looked at his watch. He remembered an appointment he had at eight. He advanced the time of it by half an hour, and said it was just too bad, but he would have to hurry away."

"I don't let me hurry you," he said, his hand on the matter of the watch, "I'm sure you'll be glad to see me." "I'm sure you'll be glad to see me," he said, his hand on the matter of the watch, "I'm sure you'll be glad to see me."

"To C. C. for sparing this effort." The Professor suddenly tumbled to the fact that "C. C." might very well stand for Christabel. All sorts of strange theories, complicated by the fact that Hewitson had gone over to the chalet to dine with Cavanagh, when that morning he had said that he did not know Cavanagh, rose in Professor Schluster's mind.

It was no surprise to him when Hewitson came in at midnight, humming a tune, and with a quite unprecedented glow in his face. Professor Schluster was a little saddened by a sense of the academic drabness of his own life. "Congratulations, Mr. Harry!" "I certainly do," said Professor Schluster, promptly. So that was how it had been settled. They were to marry.

"But you don't know—" "Yes, I do," said the Professor. "I guess you know nearly everything about it." "It was a strange story. The papers before him sounded terribly dry as he shuffled them. He was glad when Hewitson said they would have to share a bottle of champagne.

How Can I??
(By ANNE ASHLEY)
Q. How can I remove mortar from windows?
A. Mortar can be removed readily from window glass by rubbing it with strong hot vinegar.

Q. How can I give an added flavor to cooked buttered beef?
A. Try adding a teaspoon of grated horseradish.

Q. Is a hand fire extinguisher necessary to have in the home?
A. It may never be necessary, but it is good thing to have on hand. It is somewhat similar to an insurance policy, giving one a feeling of protection.

TIMELY TIPS FOR THE HOME SEWER

A cyclamen-pink crepe jacket lends a smart contrast and individuality to this navy and white print crepe dress. You can wear the dress without the jacket... the jacket will look simply marvelous over a plain navy or a black dress! It helps marvelously to stretch your budget to match and mix. The jacket can have a scalloped edge, if you like. See small view! The pattern provides for same. It's definitely smart, too, in a gay striped cotton with plain jacket for resort and later wear. You'll want to make some separate jackets to rejuvenate your last year's dress.
