Short Course at South Rustico

A highly successful Short Course of two days duration concluded at South Rustico Wednesday, March 5th. It was sponsored jointly by the Provincial Department of Agriculture and St. Dunstan's University Extension Department.

asked Mr. MacDonald and a lively discussion followed.

On Wednesday, Mr. E. M. Gosman, Manager North Rustico Co-operative Association, outlined the practical side of successful businesses operated under co-operative legislation.

The feature event of Wednesday afternoon's activities was a discussion and illustrations on Nutrition and Food Values by Miss Estelle Haines of the Charlottetown Red Cross Branch.

Mr. J. J. Larabee and P. A. McLellan discussed the problems of Island fishermen in regard to processing, marketing and inspection.

Mr. M. W. Chepesuik, Director of Marketing Production Services, Dominion Department of Agriculture, and that of the Maritime Provinces, in the course of his talk stated that Prince Edward Island could and should be referred to as the Denmark of Canada because of its quality hogs.

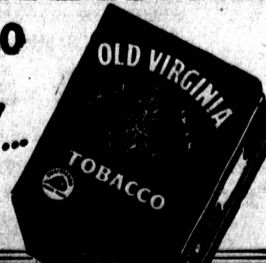

He said there were great possibilities for the exporting of registered, breeding stock to other provinces and that if the present standards of quality were expanded on a quantity basis, this goal could easily be attained.

Dr. Ernest Hess, Director Experimental Fisheries Station at Halifax, spoke briefly on the future canned fish possibilities stating that many outlets to foreign markets for this product were now closed and that new methods of processing and development of domestic markets for this food is essential.

Mr. Cousins, a representative of the Jamaica Government, who is at present studying the Co-operative Movement in the Maritime Provinces, was present at the concluding session of the Course and expressed his pleasure at being here.

Brereton Understands Women

By John Holloway Horn

They were wandering around the room looking at the pictures and Brereton was alone with Raymond Murray.

"I'm afraid it's no go, sir," Murray said. "We did less than sixty gross last week."

"It was an excellent play, well acted—in parts particularly well acted. The people are back from the holidays. What is the cause of it, Raymond?"

"We cannot compete with the films. But this is a party, and it's Sonia's. It must go with a bang. If you will let me, I'll drop in tomorrow afternoon."

"Yes, do. Here's the doctor and Sonia."

Sonia, Fatanel was wearing the frock she had worn in every play in which she had appeared in evening dress. It was black and she had paid fifty dollars for it in Solo, but she knew how to choose a frock which suited her and, moreover, how to wear it.

Jones, in his capacity as butler, announced that supper was served, and Brereton offered his arm to Sonia—whose party it was.

Miss McKeechne was not in evidence during the evening, but here was the brain and much of the work—behind it, even if the inspiration were Brereton's. It was a delightful meal and, by the end of the meal, tongues were wagging freely; that curious optimism of the stage had once more asserted itself.

Later, they danced to the radio. "It's rather a joy to watch them," the doctor said as she and Brereton stood in the alcove by the window. He was looking at Sonia who was dancing with her arm.

"It's all right for her to dance?" "Yes. It will do her good. She is an extraordinarily nice girl, Paul."

"I've never known a young girl who attracted me so much," he said. "And the alarm is so absurdly in love with her!"

"She's not in the show next week. There's no part that would suit her and, anyway, it might be rather a strain."

He nodded. "She wants to go back to that flat in Bloomsbury."

"I suppose she must if she wants to."

"Of course. She's a free agent." "There's something fey about her," he said. "Some wistful quality—I don't quite know what it is. I should like to paint her."

"I'm sure she'd like you to. It must be a great honour for you to want to paint a woman like that. Thank you. I've painted many beautiful women at one time and another—and many weather-beaten old fishermen."

"And there's always beauty in a face you paint."

Instinctively his eyes went across the room to the picture of the woman who had once been his wife.

"Always," he said. "If you were a poor artist I should commission you to paint me," she said with a smile. "Not," he added, "that I am under any illusions about my face."

"My dear Mary, I shall be delighted to accept the commission. But I shan't charge you anything for it."

"You don't want to paint me! It's a face made for grim utility, not for beauty!"

"Nonsense!" he retorted. "You have an extremely attractive profile. Your mouth is rather too big, but it's a humorous, kind mouth. Yes, I'll paint you in profile, and I'll do it because we are friends and understand each other. And because you've been so extremely kind to Sonia. Linda Keen's going to sing."

She nodded. "It's never struck me before, Mr. Brereton, that age has its compensations."

He smiled. "In some ways you're—as well as the cleverest. There was a touch of the master in the youngest woman here tonight—a pity it is that the public doesn't see Murray the support he deserves."

She nodded. "He knows he's beautiful, I'm afraid. I've known it several weeks, but he's stuck it out grimly."

"What are you going to do?" "Something will turn up," she said. "Speaking with an experience of over half a century, I say quite calmly that something always does turn up."

"For you—yes. You know your job, and for a person who knows his job—whatever the job may be—things do turn up. But some of the youngsters are not so sure of things."

"Quite. Sonia, for example. You know, Mr. Brereton, she's a delightful child, and I'm particularly fond of her, but she just isn't an actress."

He felt that the development of international relations, through the Co-operative Movement, was an important way of maintaining international peace and friendship.

Through the courtesy of the National Film Board, pictures relative to the topics under discussion, were shown each evening.

Mr. L. P. McIsaac, the last speaker, stressed the need of following-up and discussion, by organization and action. Committees were appointed for different projects and many practical results are anticipated.

At the conclusion of the Course Mr. P. Blanchard, moved, seconded by W. A. Doucette, a hearty vote of thanks to all those who contributed to the success of the Course. This was extended to the different speakers by the Chairman, Rev. Clarence Pitt.

KISS YOUR TIRED FEELING GOODBYE!

Foibles Many Suffer Low Blood Count—And Don't Know It. The baffling thing about low blood count is that you can weigh about as much as you ever did—even look healthy and strong, yet you can feel as if you had lead in your legs, dopey, tired and peevish. Low blood count means you haven't got enough red blood corpuscles. It is their vital job to carry life-giving oxygen from your lungs throughout your body. And just as it takes oxygen to explode gasoline in your car and make the power to turn the wheels, so you must have plenty of oxygen to enable the energy in your body and give you going power. Get Dr. Williams' Pink Pills today. They are world-famous for the help they give in increasing the number and strength of red corpuscles. Then with your blood count up, you'll feel like bounding up the stairs as if you were floating on air. Ask your druggist for Dr. Williams' Pink Pills today.

Disabled Vessel Reaches Yarmouth

YARMOUTH, N.S., March 5.—(CP)—The salvage tug Foundation Franklin with the rudderless 300-ton motor vessel Princess Pat in tow arrived here today after three days of battling mountainous seas off Nova Scotia's southwest tip. The Yarmouth-owned vessel, bound home from Turk's Island with a cargo of salt, sent out distress signals Friday when she lost her rudder 150 miles off Cape Sable.

GRADED BY SHAPE

Atlantic oysters are graded according to the shape of the shell, which affects the plumpness of the oyster meat.
