WONDERFUL FAITH

The wonderful faith of a little child has formed the theme of many a touching story and many a lugubrious sonnet, yet there is a more wonderful faith even than this. This is when the child's faith grows up, so to speak; when, retaining the shadowy tints of childish innocence, it becomes incorporated and incarnated in a full grown, able bodied, hard headed adult accustomed to the ways of the world and the wiles of the politician.

It is now admitted the election race in Britain lies between the Conservatives and the Labour

Notes By The Way

The general election in Great Britain and the presidential election in the United States will take place quite close together, one during the last week of the present month and the other early in November. The progress of the two campaigns will be watched with intense interest during the next few weeks by one hundred and fifty millions of English-speaking people more immediately concerned and by other millions speaking the same language in the British Dominions over the sea.

For long periods in the past the political divisions in Britain and in the States have been between two great parties in each country, Conservative and Liberal in Britain, Republican and Democratic in the States. This time, as was the case at the last general election in Canada, there are three parties in each of the two nations most directly concerned the strong Labour party in Britain and a motley party under the leadership of Senator La Follette in the States, each contending for the mastery, complicating the struggle and making the final result more than usually doubtful.

In Great Britain political affairs have been very unsettled since the Great War and elections have followed each other with unusual frequency. In the election of a year ago neither of the three principal parties gained a clear majority of the House of Commons, but the Labour party, having the largest numbers, was placed in power. It was an unfortunate condition of affairs somewhat similar to what we have had in Canada since the election of 1921. A government with only a minority support is essentially weak both in legislative or administrative power and is always at the mercy of the parties in opposition whenever they choose to unite their forces to compass its defeat.

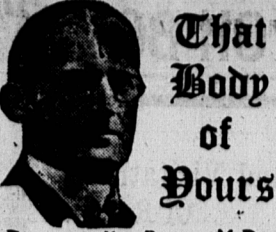

Premier Macdonald undoubtedly surprised his opponents by forming an Administration that was stronger in its personnel than they had expected, and he himself displayed qualities of leadership and a moderate and conciliatory policy which during the first six months gained strength for his Government and party. His Russian treaty lost him some ground, and he can hardly hope to be sustained at the polls with a majority over both of the two older parties combined. It is however quite a matter of doubt whether he may not gain some additional strength in the election or at least retain a following larger than that of the Conservative leader, his most formidable opponent.

It is quite as true of elections as of other mundane affairs that the unexpected happens frequently and it is futile to predict the results in the election on either side of the Atlantic when the decision is so near. On the other side we are told that the betting odds are nine to one that the Ramsay MacDonald Government will not obtain a majority of the new House of Commons. In the United States the betting has from the first strongly indicated the election of Mr. Coolidge, but confidence in that regard has been somewhat diminished of late owing to the growing strength of La Follette in the West.

This appears to be a matter of concern to Republicans and Democrats alike, not that they fear that he may be or that they fear that he may not be elected, but that they fear he may obtain so much support that neither Coolidge nor Davis will be able to get a majority in the Electoral College. This would throw the election into Congress and create new possibilities which are being speculated upon as the contest grows more intense. However improbable such a result may be, it is said to be possible, if no choice can be made by the Electoral College, that a Republican President and a Democratic Vice President, or vice versa, may be the ultimate result. That would be unsatisfactory and unfortunate but one would suppose that any thing so amazing is not likely to happen.

That Body of Yours

SHOULDER AND ARM PAIN

One of the common ailments these days is pain in the shoulder and arm.

It is called neuritis, muscular rheumatism, and neuralgia. In the majority of cases it is a simple neuralgia, or slight inflammatory condition of the nerves that supply the muscles of shoulder and arm.

The pain may extend from the back of the neck where the nerves begin, right into shoulder, and down the arm to the hand.

It is usually just on the one side, but may extend from one arm to the other. Many physicians are inclined to trace its cause to influenza, as the number of cases has greatly increased since the first influenza epidemic over thirty years ago.

The pain varies in intensity, and in severe cases there is a loss of power in the muscle, with sometimes a painful condition of the skin, and at other times a partial loss of sensation.

The patient resists movements when ever possible, carrying his arm as if in a sling, by his side.

I wish I could tell you the cause of the trouble in ever case, but that is impossible, and you and your doctor will have to find out the particular trouble in your case.

An injury to back or shoulder may be causing some pressure. Any inflammatory or infectious condition in the body, such as bad teeth, gums, tonsils, or nose, might follow diphtheria, scarlet fever, measles, mumps typhoid fever and so forth.

In the meantime however, you must try and relieve the pain because that is the main symptom.

It is not wise here either, to begin massaging the muscles at first. They need rest more than anything else.

All kinds of drugs, and different forms of electrical treatment are used, and often to advantage.

However, if pain is not too severe, the old fashioned method of moist heat is the simplest and most effective measure.

Use hot towels for twenty minutes at a stretch, at least four to six times a day.

Between times apply a hot water bag covered with wet towels of cloths, to the painful part.

Heat then is your big standby. Don't use morphine. If drugs are absolutely necessary to allay the pain, then aspirin, antipyrin, acetanilid may be used.

After the severe pain departs, then begin your massage, as it will help the circulation, and prevent wasting of muscles.

CRICKETS Still, so still, is the autumn night, The winds have folded their wings; There's never a whisper among the leaves, And never a bird that sings; But down the valley and over the hill The crickets are harping clear; Their thin sweet music of mist and dream Is the only sound I hear.

Why do they wake through the long, long night? And what is the happy theme, The mystic rune of their endless tune That floats in the starry gleam? I know but this—each tiny song Is a part of the great-world-strain; The heart of the Infinite hears and knows, And never a note is vain.

And what if I breathe but a simple song, Far off from the crowded ways, With sunshine gold for my recompense, And the harp of the winds for praise? So long as my heart is a home of prayer, And my voice in the vales is free, The Infinite listens and loves. His grace Shall be sufficient for me.

A DAY OF PRAYER IN THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND

Sir,—Anglicans in Prince Edward Island who are in touch with their Church in the Motherland have been following with interest a proposed revision of the Book of Common Prayer, particularly in its Communion Office, which was designed to give expression to doctrines the very opposite to what the book has stood for since the Reformation. Bishop E. A. Knox who has just retired from the See of Manchester has headed a great Crusade for the preservation of the old book in its integrity and has rallied churchmen by hundreds of thousands to his support. Thursday of this week, October 16th is being observed as a great day of prayer, throughout the Church in England, in defence of the Prayer Book as it is. No doubt there are many friends in this Province and Dominion who will like to join with Bishop Knox as well put it in a recent letter to the Mother Church betrays the trust committed to her at the Reformation, the daughter churches throughout the Empire will be affected."

Governor Hartz Appeals For Orphans

"It is hardly necessary to state that under these circumstances it follows that it is incumbent upon the Protestant people of Prince Edward Island to assist in paying off the indebtedness, and to determine that the Orphanage's call for means shall not be made in vain."

The foregoing is an excerpt from a letter written by His Honour Frank R. Hartz, Lieutenant Governor, Honorary Chairman of the Campaign to Mr. Frederick Courtenay Barber, director of the public appeal for funds to pay the indebtedness of and to provide maintenance for Prince Edward Island Protestant Orphanage. The full text of Lieutenant Governor Hartz's letter follows:

Charlottetown, P. E. I. October 10th, 1924. Sir:—It is with exceptional interest that I note the progress that is being made for the successful launching of the Drive to secure fifty thousand dollars for the Protestant Orphanage. I have read the preliminary operations and the names of the prominent ladies and gentlemen associated with the undertaking; also with gratification that forty-five communities other than Charlottetown and Summerside have already organized.

All are aware that undertakings for worthy purposes are in accord with the spirit of the age. Our people are in my opinion they are satisfied to cheerfully provide means for the carrying on of absolutely necessary institutions in this Province.

Comparatively speaking Prince Edward Island has accomplished much in this direction, as evidenced by the many excellent institutions for the sick, physically and mentally for the poor, and for the orphans, who otherwise would be cast upon the individual charity of the different communities. To my mind there are many reasons which should appeal to the people in regard to what is now being undertaken for the Protestant Orphanage.

In this Province, as well as in other parts of the world, institutions such as orphanages, hospitals and those for educational purposes, as well as homes for aged people, are mostly and distinctively owned and maintained separately by the Protestant and the Catholic bodies.

Here there are two orphanages, one the St. Vincent's Orphanage, belonging to and operated by the Catholic Church; and the other the Protestant Orphanage owned and operated until a short time ago by the Orange Society; but now I understand arrangements have been completed for the future administration of this institution as in the future annual meetings open to all Protestants will be held, and the government of the institution will be carried on along similar lines as those which govern the maintenance of the Prince Edward Island Hospital and all other properly constituted bodies. I am satisfied that this move will result in more generous contributions to the institution, while giving greater satisfaction to the Protestant people who are so directly concerned in and responsible for its welfare.

It is hardly necessary to state that under these circumstances it follows that it is incumbent upon the Protestant people of Prince Edward Island to assist in paying off the indebtedness, and to determine that the Orphanage's call for means shall not be made in vain.

There are two sides to a matter of this kind. First there is the necessity for providing and maintaining the Orphanage, which may be termed "the casting of bread upon the waters"; and secondly there is the great value of the institution as a nursery for future prominent citizens.
