On some items where the preferential and the intermediate rates were the same, there is a reduction of duty which will apply to the intermediate. This does not however affect British manufacturers seriously, because as regards the items referred to the British do not seriously compete.

our trade and our industrial life we shall be able to produce some things which we shall want to export in the future to a larger degree than we have done in the past.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is the admission not sweeping in its statement that the Schemie A? Is France not free to grant lower tariffs than she grants to us, not only to her protectors—which of course we cannot object to—but also to enemy and adjacent countries?

Mr. FIELDING: Perhaps my right hon. friend has been reading article II.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes.

Mr. FIELDING: That article reads: The grant of the minimum tariff for the products enumerated in schedule A means the treatment of the most favored nation as respects such products, but does not entitle Canada to claim the benefit of any preferential advantage which France may grant to her protectors or to the beneficiaries of any tariff which France may grant to other countries.

Mr. MEIGHEN: With all deference to my hon. friend, who I am sure knows more about it than I do, I hardly think that that could be the significance of this reservation. This article reserves the right to France to enter into treaties with border states, such as Switzerland, Spain, Italy, and Belgium.
