PASSES Scout Wallace Kinnaird of the Sinclair and the latter's daughter, Scout Group of the Sick Children's Hospital, Toronto, recently awarded the 3rd Canadian Scout "V.C." the Cornwall Badge, died Dec. 31st. During eighteen months in hospital Scout Kinnaird entertained and instructed other boy patients in the most effective, cheery manner, notwithstanding the early certainty of his death.

ANOTHER SCOUT "V.C."

By unusual coincidence following the third award within a few weeks, the fourth award to a Canadian Scout of the rare Cornwall Badge, the "V.C." of Scouting, was made to Scout Myddleton MacKenzie of Victoria, B. C. The medal was given for exceptional, cheery fortitude during some twelve years of suffering following partial paralysis when 7 years of age. In spite of a useless, paining arm, Scout MacKenzie progressed steadily in Scouting and on reaching 18 years assisted in running a Cub Pack or Scout Troop whenever his physical condition permitted.

FAMOUS FAMILY DYING OUT

LONDON.—Feb. 4.—(C. P.) Through the death of Alfred Muddie, at 89 years of age, the famous family which first taught London the circulating library habit is left with only one member—Arthur O. Muddie. More than 90 years ago Muddie's Library started in Cheyne Walk, Chelsea. It moved to Bloomsbury in 1844, where it has remained, but at different addresses, ever since. Many famous authors of the Victorian period owed a good deal of their popularity to Muddie's. It put into circulation 3,000 copies of George Eliot's "Silmaril" and more of Disraeli's "Endymion." Livingstone's "Travels" were brought by the firm into prominent notice, and later still Stanley's "In Darkest Africa." Nowadays Muddie's have a host of competitors, of course, but they also secure new subscribers in plenty.

ROLLO BAY EAST INSTITUTE

The members held their January meeting at the home of Mrs. Andrew F. Peters, with seven members and five visitors present. Meeting opened by reading, "A Club Woman's Creed" and the Roll Call answer was the payment of annual fee. Minutes of last meeting were read and approved, after which a discussion took place concerning ways and means of raising funds. Members finally decided to make a patchwork quilt and have lottery on same. The musical part of the program consisted of piano selections by the Misses Margaret, Peters and Minnie Chaisson. A dainty lunch was served by the Misses Margaret and Sarah Peters and the meeting adjourned by singing the National Anthem. Mrs. Jerome B. Chaisson kindly invited the members to her home for the next meeting when answer to Roll Call will be Valentine Verses.

SCHOOL SPORTS

The annual ice sports of the Summerside High School were held in the Crystal Rink on Friday evening and were a great success and very well attended by parents and friends of the children. A feature of the evening was a hockey game between West Kent School, Charlottetown, and Summerside High. The game was a close one and ended in a tie. Both teams played excellent hockey and some clever play was seen. The game was good and fast all through providing plenty of excitement for the fans. In the first period Darrach scored a goal for West Kent and in the second period Prichard evened the score for Summerside. The third period was very exciting and early in this period, Johnson scored an another goal for the visitors. The home team getting very determined, made some good rushes, but only when the period was almost at an end did they manage to even the score, Steele saving the situation for them by running up the ice with the puck and in a little mixup in front of the net, shot the puck home. The game ended in a tie, the score being 2-2. The different races and other sports provided plenty of fun for the spectators. All events were run off very well. Mayor Manson opened the proceedings, and afterwards congratulated the children on their fine showing. The program and winners: Relay Race—W. K. S. J. Rattenbury, D. Ramsay, T. Simpson, B. Crabbe, S. EMINENT

During the last week the Archbishop has visited various congregations in New Brunswick. He will spend the greater part of the remainder of this week in Nova Scotia, and will then leave for Quebec, Montreal, and Ottawa. A noted figure who has carried the gospel of Christianity into the far north lands of Canada, Archbishop Stringer has had a remarkable as well as strenuous career in the ministry of the Anglican Church. Five years before the Klondyke gold rush, graduating from Toronto and then from Wycliffe College, this young clergyman who stands six foot tall set out for Herschel Island, one of the farthest North mission posts of the Anglican Church in Canada. This lay 2,000 miles north of Edmonton. When in 1898 he was married and his wife went north with him, she was the only white woman inside the Arctic Circle, the post lying 400 miles within it. The Eskimos had no written language and had little idea of civilization. He prepared an alphabet and finally translated the gospels into the Eskimo tongue. He ministered to all sorts of people in his vast territory, doing much travelling in his wide diocese. Naturally enough he encountered many hazards. In 1909, along with an assistant, he lost his way and their rations ran out. Reference was made to the financial disaster which had overtaken the work in Western Canada, in which the Anglican Church had lost $760,000 in church funds. This money the saving of which had been begun by Archbishop MacRae had been for the support of widows, orphans, aged clergy and bishops, and had come from England. All had been invested with the legal and investment firms, Macchray and Sharp, with whom the University of Manitoba also had had money invested. As a result of an investigation, it had become known that the University had lost millions and the church $700,000. Anglican Church officials had met and as an executive council decided that the Church in Canada would undertake to restore the losses within the next three years. Canon Good was organizer for the men, and Mrs. McElheran for the women. It was hoped that the funds would be restored within three years. In the meantime officers of the missionary society, missionaries in the foreign field, and those under the society in Canada were giving seven per cent of their incomes to make up the stipends of missionary bishops in five dioceses. The bishops and other clergy were giving toward the maintenance fund in order that the work might continue as if nothing had happened. Archbishop Stringer remarked that since 1893 when he had first gone into the Arctic he had seen a great change come over the Indians. Many had been converted and a number had been ordained. Thirty years ago, when he had preached in St. Paul's Church on one occasion, there were no converts in the Arctic, but the Eskimos had changed. It was seventeen years after he had first gone to the Arctic before he had had a conversion. They now have their own teachers, and one ordained clergyman. If funds were not replaced the work among the Eskimos would have to be curtailed and discontinued. It was for the Church to answer whether these regions in Northern Canada would revert to heathenism, and other districts remain in heathenism.

Our minds," he stated, "are becoming more capable than ever before of taking a broader and comprehensive view of conditions and needs beyond our own borders." The history of the mission work of the Anglican Church in the west was reviewed from its inception in 1820, when Rev. John West, a Hudson Bay Co. chaplain, began preaching in Western Canada. The mission work had been built up little by little. Bishop Anderson, the first bishop had been succeeded by Bishop MacRae, who had been succeeded by Archbishop Matheson. The speaker had succeeded the latter a year and a half ago, after having been five years Bishop of Yukon and having spent thirty years at mission work in the north. Reference was made to the financial disaster which had overtaken the work in Western Canada, in which the Anglican Church had lost $760,000 in church funds. This money the saving of which had been begun by Archbishop MacRae had been for the support
