2 Great Serpents Horrify the Prince

PORT ELIZABETH, S. A., May 14.—The Prince of Wales fresh from his visit to the horse-breeding farms at Colerberg, came upon a different kind of farm today, where the snake holds sway. He showed great interest in the reptiles, but no great pleasure. The reptiles, only one lip of which was not dangerous, occupy an enclosed area, excavated to a depth of about three feet, and surrounded by a stream of water. The Prince watched two black keepers handling seemingly with much enjoyment two fourteen-foot pythons, which wound themselves around the men harmlessly. But when His Highness was invited to a closer inspection of the great serpents, he took a hurried step backward and exclaimed: "No they horrify me."

FREEDOM OF LONDON FOR ASQUITH

Ve t e r a n Statesman Paid Eloquent Tribute to Lloyd George -- Great Achievements During the War.

LONDON, May 14.—Possibly few men are more conscious of how the passing of time mellow the bitter feelings engendered in the stress of wartime than the Earl of Oxford and Asquith, who received the freedom of London today amid the customary elaborate ceremonial and brilliant company. He made reference to Lloyd George, who was present at the ceremonial and who possesses the freedom of 35 cities in Great Britain in the following words:

LLOYD-GEORGE'S WORK.

"I have spoken of a great sailor and a great soldier (referring to remarks he had made about Viscount Jellicoe and Earl Haig, both of whom were present) and now let me add a word about a great civilian. Provision, almost miraculous in its range and rapidity of munitions and a wholly new armory to meet wholly new exigencies, will live in history as the unique achievement of Lloyd George."

PRaised by ROTHERMERE.

A few nights ago Lord Oxford and Asquith presided at a dinner in aid of the newspaper press fund when, as usual, it is expected that special subscription to this well known benevolent fund would be made. A letter was read on behalf of Lord Rothermere, who in sending £2,000, described Lord Oxford and Asquith as "the man who spoke with a noble voice for England at the crisis in her fate in 1914 and who, having captured with dignity and good humor the blows that fell upon leading partisans in our domestic parties, has now come into that peaceful haven where our elder statesmen enjoy the esteem and affection of all of us."

TRIBUTE CALLED HAPPY.

This tribute was a significantly happy one during Lord Oxford and Asquith's presidency of the fund, for the Daily Mail and other Rothermere papers approached sheer insuperation in their criticisms of the then premier during the early war years.
