PLUG SMOKING

"It's good Tobacco"

THE man who smokes the big plug has reasons aplenty, aside from the real pipe enjoyment he gets from Master Mason. There is no waste: there's no loss of flavor; and there's the satisfying economy. For the big Master Mason plug is high quality tobacco at the rock bottom price.

A HUSBAND TO MARCIA

By CAROLYN BEECHER

CHAPTER XXXIV

John Aldrich leaned back in his chair and considered his wife impersonally. She had just told him she wished to go to Atlantic City for a week or two until her new car should be ready.

"Can't you arrange to go with me?"

"Emphatically no! I hate to refuse you an outing, Marcia, but I can scarcely consider Atlantic City after just buying the car. I will try to make it possible for you to go to some quiet, inexpensive place."

"No, indeed, John! Several of the clubs are going down so they can be there together and have a good time."

"Well, you will have to stay back in the town, not on the broadwalk. Those hotels are very expensive."

"Oh, I shall have to go where the rest do! Claire Sanders is making the arrangements. But I hate leaving you."

"I'll get on."

That Marcia went goes without saying. Also that she went to one of the smartest hotels. John was surprised at the sense of relief that came over him when she had gone. The days just passed had been trying.

When John had balked at the hotel, Marcia had said:

"Why I shouldn't think of going anywhere else after Claire has made all the arrangements. Then, too, John it would look as if you weren't able to pay my way. All the women are married except Claire, and their husbands are willing that they shall go in good style."

"Perhaps their husbands aren't quite so big against the financial proposition as I happen to be."

"Then, 'Couldn't you—'"

"No, I couldn't!" Marcia interrupted. "I am sorry to be such a burden, John. Her lips trembled. "Perhaps you won't always have me."

"You look perfectly healthy."

The answer was perhaps brutal and warranted the reception it received, the gust of tears, the tearing sob.

But John had heard it so often, that speech about not being with him always, etc. Women have a great paucity of expression when trying to impress a husband that they aren't to be long on earth. John walked from the room. He knew he was rude, but he was tired and his nerves were raw.

"Good God!" he had muttered. "Is there ever to be an end to her demands? She takes her pound of my flesh, and then some." But he went to the train to see her off and in some way managed to give her enough money so that she could pay her bill at the hotel and have enough spending money so that she would not be mortified before her companions.

Then came the feeling of relief for which John at first scourged himself. He was almost happy to be alone.

The dutiful little note he received each morning was dutifully read. Yet they were so nearly alike that he almost knew their contents before he opened them. Then when she had been gone a week she wrote him asking for money. She had used some of that he had given her for her hotel bill as well as all her spending money.

"The shops on the broadwalk are irresistible," she wrote. And I have bought such darling dolls and tin cans. Then yesterday I found a duck of a hat, so becoming, I needed a new one and might as well get it here, so I bought it. Money seems to fly here. So send me all you can."

"Love and kisses, Marcia."

John, of course sent the money. What else could the poor man do? Then he was enjoying his freedom, enjoying the brief respite from entertaining and being entertained. He worked evenings, or wandered about gazing in the windows of an elite shop, occasionally seeing a piece of china he coveted, never daring to ask the price, or to enter the store. He realized his weakness.

Then one afternoon as he wandered up the street he saw a cup, a tiny thing, but of the eye of an connoisseur priceless. Without stopping to think he entered the store.

Then it was that he met Muriel Doran.

"Something I can show you?" John started, as he heard the sweet, low voice.

"Yes, that cup in the window."

his eyes no won her instead of the precious bit of china that lost some of its fascination before the fragile cup and gave it into his hands.

"It is beautiful, isn't it?" Daintily as one who loved it, she lifted the cup and gave it into his hands.

"Exquisite," he replied, but was it the face, or the cup to which he referred. The look in his eyes had brought a wave of color to her cheeks and the long lashes hid the violet eyes.

John Aldrich did not buy the cup. He would think it over, he told her. It would give him an excuse to see her again.

FOX BISCUIT

The Imperial Cod Oil Fox Biscuit

MANUFACTURED AT CHARLOTTETOWN P. E. I.

GUARANTEED A PERFECT FOOD FOR FOXES, containing the whole wheat flour with a liberal quantity of cod liver oil and meat scrap. These biscuits are nourishing and highly relished by foxes. They are slightly laxative and will keep the bowels and stomach in first class condition. Can be fed at all seasons and are especially adapted for young foxes when fed soaked in milk.

Cod Oil biscuits are highly recommended by experienced ranchers, having been fed in leading P. E. Island ranches for many years. If you wish well-developed foxes and pelts of lustrous quality, feed liberally with Imperial Cod Oil Biscuit. The biscuits contain pure medicinal Cod liver oil which has been Government inspected. We do not use crude Cod fish oil which is liable to become rancid.

EXCESSIVE MEAT FEEDING has been the cause of many troubles among foxes. Cereals, containing the most nourishing parts of the wheat germ, with vegetable and animal oils, must always be the safest and best food for foxes. The object of the manufacturers is to make a biscuit, that will prove a well-balanced ration for a fox, having a high percentage of carbohydrates, protein and fat. Analysis, made by the Dominion Analyst, shows that this has been obtained in the Imperial Fox Biscuit but the best proof of a good fox biscuit is the practical results in our P. E. I. ranches.

WE WANT every rancher in the Maritime Provinces to test these biscuits and therefore make this offer. Send us $9.00 and we shall ship to your station 100 lbs. of the Imperial Cod Biscuits, freight prepaid. This offer applies only to those who are not already feeding the biscuit.
