Cormier of Halifax, N.S. After the ceremony the bridal party spent the day motoring to points of interest, returning in the evening to the home of the groom's sister, Mrs. Leo McArville with whom their mother resides. A bountiful wedding supper was served after which a reception was held. The groom has spent the past eight years in Halifax, and after a short honeymoon trip Mr. and Mrs. Baker will return to Halifax where Mr. Baker holds a lucrative position. K

Educate Eskimos Through Jig-Saw Puzzle Passion

(By R. K. Carnegie)
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

LAKE HARBOR, Baffin Island, Oct. 1—The Eskimo's passion for jig-saw puzzles is being guided in the direction of teaching those people to read and write in the syllabarium; phonetic characters, some 60 in all, originally worked out for the Cree Indians. It has been found simpler to form Eskimo words by the use of these characters than by the English alphabet which often makes words cumbersomely long.

First brought to the Eskimos some 20 years ago by Rev. Dr. R. J. Peck, Anglican missionary, and developed by Roman Catholic and Anglican missionaries since, notably Bishop Arsene Turquetil of the Roman Catholic diocese of Hudson Bay, natives are rapidly learning to read notices in the syllabic characters.

This year when the R. M. S. Nascopie came north carrying the Eastern Arctic Patrol, a Dominion Government party, Major D. L. McKeand, commander of the patrol, took with him 4,000 sets of the syllabarium, the gift of R. P. Isbestor of Hamilton, Ont. They were distributed at every post where the ship stopped and were welcomed by the Eskimos.

Some years ago, the Young Men's Canadian Club of Montreal sent many jig-saw puzzles to the north and the natives enthused over them. These people, noted for their patience, had the time of their lives working out the puzzles, and it is believed they will show the same enthusiasm in forming words with the syllabic sets in which each character is a separate piece.

"The introduction of the syllabarium already has been a great help to the Eskimos," said William Gibson, Hudson's Bay Company inspector and an acknowledged authority on Eskimo life. "It is not used in the Western Arctic, but in the Eastern Arctic we are able to post notices in these characters and the natives know what they mean. Eskimos now send notes to relatives written in syllabic characters and are quite proud of it. Previously they had no written language."

Mounted Police also use it and before almost every post in the Eastern Arctic, notices to the natives about conserving game and other advice occupy prominent positions.

Price On Starfish Head As Oyster Foe

NEW MOVE TO CHECK ENEMY OF OYSTERS ON P.E.I. UNDERWATER FARMS—BOUNTY GRANTED ON MALPEQUE BAY CAPTURES—STARFISH OPENS OYSTER SHELLS WITH NARCOTIC, EATS WITH MOVABLE STOMACH.

Malpeque Bay starfish have been put in the Rogues' Gallery, with a price upon their heads. They are Public Enemy No. 1, or Oyster Enemy No. 1, in Malpeque Bay's oyster farming areas in Prince Edward Island and the Dominion Department of Fisheries, which initiated the oyster raising program when the island transferred its oyster areas to federal control a few years ago, is this year paying a bounty of 25 cents a gallon for their destruction.

Oyster farming has been making rapid progress in Prince Edward Island in the past few years but starfish are natural enemies of oysters and will destroy a good many of them if uncontrolled. Reducing the starfish population in Malpeque Bay, where the farming is mainly centred, will help in increasing the oyster population, and that, of course, is the reason for the bounty plan.

The bounty is payable only on starfish taken in that part of the bay which has been covered by topographical survey for oyster farming purposes. The total sum to be paid is limited to $500 but a simple bit of arithmetic will show that this is enough money to take care of bounty on 2,000 gallons of the bandits. In the oyster producing provinces other than Prince Edward Island, by the way, control of the areas is in provincial hands, except in the case of Nova Scotia and there the transfer of jurisdiction to the Dominion authorities took place only recently and it has not yet been determined just what steps need to be taken to aid in commercial oyster culture.

To anyone who has seen both the oyster and the common starfish it may seem strange that the latter can conquer the former since oysters wear coats of shell and starfish are comparatively weak creatures. But along with a taste for oysters Nature also gave the starfish some special oyster-opening equipment. Once this equipment comes into play in earnest, the victim hasn't much chance, especially if it is small. The starfish clasps the oyster in its arms or rays—usually there are five of them—and applies pressure to the valves of the shell by means of the sucker disks which are ranged along the bottom of the rays. As the pressure goes on, the starfish apparently emits a narcotic substance which penetrates between the edges of the shell and dulls the oyster's power of resistance until at last the shell pulls open.

Stomach That Moves

Then the starfish makes his meal. It has a peculiar way of eating too, the starfish. As one writer describes what happens, the starfish "brings his stomach out through his mouth, which is on the under side of his body, and wraps it around the oyster. When the meal is digested he puts his stomach back again." Or, as a Canadian authority puts it, starfish "are able to turn their stomachs out of their mouths to envelop their food."

There are different ways of getting rid of starfish on oyster ground but perhaps the most satisfactory method is to clean them from the beds by mops made of lengths of kinkly cotton, two-foot or three-foot lengths, knotted to a wire. The mops are towed along the bottom, a series of them together, and from time to time they are lifted to the surface and the starfish removed.

Oysters, of course, are one of the best of sea foods and they have this added merit that they are valuable in the diet of persons disposed to anaemia. In Canada oysters are taken on parts of both coasts but the Dominion supply is not equal to the Dominion demand. Increased production is the aim of the oyster farming policy which the Department of Fisheries is applying in those provinces where the oyster areas are under its control.

Princess Louise Energetic At 90 In Social Tasks

FORMER RIDEAU HALL CHATELAINE HAS BIG LIST OF AUTUMN DUTIES—LABOR CONGRESS ADOPTS CHARTER FOR NURSES.

BY MOLLIE MCGEE
Canadian Press Correspondent

LONDON, Sept. 26 —(CP) — Ninety years young, the oldest Princess in England is busy with public appearances while other more sprightly members of the royal family are holidaying.

Princess Louise, Duchess of Argyll, daughter of the Queen Victoria, once used the ballroom at Rideau Hall in Ottawa as a sculptor's studio while her husband was governor-general. There she made the statue of her mother now in front of Victoria College, Montreal. She also founded women's art and education associations in Canada and now she is still actively engaged in furthering the causes of her favorite charities.

Early in September this energetic Princess attended the church parade of ex-service men and Sandhurst army cadets, opened an Old English Fair at Hendon in aid of a hospital and has a long list of similar engagements for the autumn.

It will be almost Christmas before the entire royal family are back in London. The Princess Royal will probably be the last to return as the King and Queen will visit her at Harewood House in October.

Country week-ends have proved a boon to royalty. The King and Duke of Kent both make full use of their country homes, Royal Lodge and Coppins. There is much talk of Queen Mary also acquiring a country "cottage" and Sussex is mentioned as the most likely locality. This habit of "days off" for royalty and their attendants is entirely new and very popular.

Many country hostesses brought large parties up to town for the premiere of the autumn ballet season at Covent Garden. Fashion shows are taking place almost daily. The great dressmaking houses on Hanover Square, Grosvenor Street and Bruton Street are decked out as for weddings and vie for each other in the strength of ther cocktails as well as with the beauty and chic of their new style models.

Waistlines Higher

A new silhouette has appeared. Mannequins seen at the first dress shows have had to adapt their figures to wear it. Some designers chose girls of athletic build to show off the new peacock-line and short-skirted evening dresses. Waistlines are considerably higher, bust and hiplines now measure about the same.

New fashions appear everywhere. A September bride carried a book-marker bouquet. She was very slight so it was decided a conventional bouquet would look out of place. However, from a vellum prayer book, a three-foot tulle book-marker fell, covered with lily of the valley trails.

The more serious side of women's activities has not been neglected.

A nurses charter was adopted by the Trades Union Congress, by what is considered an "appalling" shortage of nursing recruits in England. The charter urges limitation of nurses hours to 96 a fortnight, special pay for overtime, a month's holiday with pay, disability pensions, superannuation and other reforms.

A charter has also been urged for domestic servants who are in increasing demand. Statistics show about 2,000,000 women engaged in domestic service in England, with indoor servants numbering about 1,300,000.

THE COOK'S CORNER

The final test, if you are not sure when they are done, is to remove one puff from the pan. If it does not fall in the cool air, it is thoroughly done. When the puffs are well cooled, cut open on one side and fill with whipped sweetened cream. You may fill these puffs with chocolate whipped cream, sliced fruit or ice-cream to suit your taste. If you wish to make half this amount halve the recipe. And to measure 1-2 an egg beat the egg slightly with a fork, pour into a measuring cup and divide.

ELBOW GREASE REQUIRED

You can't make a meringue with incantations, even though the perfect result does seem sheer magic. You may want to use the electric mixer but elbow grease is better.

In order that the action of air may be complete, the egg whites should be beaten with a whisk. A dover beater or a churn beater cannot whip the amount of air necessary to make a perfect meringue from the egg whites.

Eggs from three to five days old are most satisfactory. They increase in volume more at this stage of freshness than at any other time. Also eggs that are not too cold become stiffer than the chilled ones we used to be advised to use. Keep this in mind when you make an angel food cake, to. Some cooks, in their zeal to get fresh eggs, defeat their own ends because a day-old egg does not beat up as stiff as a three-day egg.

SEPARATING EGG WHITE

Great care must be taken to separate the white from the yolk. Even a tiny bit of the yolk prevents the white from beating well. If much of the yolk is broken through the white the egg can be used for some other baking, but not for meringue. However, a small amount of yolk can be removed by dampening a soft clean cloth and dipping it into the streak of yolk until every trace is removed.

A simple meringue is used for pie and pudding frostings. For meringue shells you use the same ingredients in different proportions.

If you store the shells in an air tight container they will keep a week or more and they certainly make a festive dessert filld with fresh fruit and whipped cream, or with any ice cream mixture.

PLAIN MERINGUE

Whites 2 eggs, 1 tablespoon lemon juice, 6 tablespoons powdered sugar, few grains salt.

Beat whites of eggs with lemon juice until stiff. Fold in sugar and salt, adding about 2 tablespoonsful of sugar at a time. Pile on pie or pudding and bake fifteen minutes in a slow oven (300 degrees F.) The lemon juice flavors the meringue and also helps to harden the albumen, making a fine meringue.

MERINGUE SHELLS

One-half cup egg whites, 1-8 teaspoon salt, 1 cup fine granulated sugar, 1-2 teaspoon vanilla.

Beat egg whites on a large platter until stiff, sprinkle salt over when beginning to beat. Beat in two tablespoons sugar. Add sugar gradually, beating constantly until a silver knife comes out clean when it is plunged into the mixture. Cover a damp board that is at least an inch thick with heavy foolscap paper. Drop mixture from tip of spoon or force through pastry tube. Bake fifty minutes in a very slow oven (275 to 300 degrees F) The shells really dry more than they bake. They should be slightly colored, when done and firm to the touch. Remove from oven and slide from paper. Scoop out the soft inside and return to oven for a few more minutes to dry the inside of the shells.

Fill with ice cream or a fruit whip and whipped cream when ready to serve.

Canada's First Danish Colony Is Prospering

NEW DENMARK, N. B., Oct. 1—Attractive, prosperous and happy are terms fittingly applied to this village, grown from the first Danish settlement in Canada. At the outset, however, it presented a depressing picture, involving a story of misrepresentation and hardships.

Lured by the glowing promises of a sea captain who had obtained a government contract to bring Danish immigrants to Canada, 52 men, women and children arrived here in 1872. Instead of green fields waiting to be planted they found the site was a forest with no cleared land. A "comfortable building ready for them to live" was an uncompleted log structure, florless and with only half a roof.

The colonists had reached Grand Falls, eight miles from here in Victoria County, on a small vessel. Not even a wagon trail existed through the woods to their new home. Tired and discouraged after staking their life savings on the "promised land" venture, they huddled together in the single room of the "immigrant house."

Only Home

This was their only home during the first months. Women cooked on one stove. Gradually they cleared land and built log huts. It was slow work for their unskilled hands. They were unaccustomed to the woods and had no horses or oxen and only crude implements. More settlers, who had listened to the same skipper, arrived the following year. They were even more miserable, having reached Saint John before the ice ran out of the St. John river. During a month's wait until navigation resumed they exhausted their funds. The provincial government gave the Danes some employment by cutting a road to the colony.

Two years passed before two of the new residents earned enough to pool their resources and buy New Denmark's first cow. Another four years elapsed before anyone could purchase a horse. Beasts of burden were mostly oxen. The harness was made from closeline, and the cart wheels were fashioned out of logs. Everyone wore homespun and wooden shoes.

Later some of the men crossed the border to work, save their money and bring it home. The girls went into domestic service. One of those who went away was Anders Jenson, now the colony's grand old man who has represented it on the Victoria County council for many years. He became a prominent farmer and merchant.

Happy Contrast

Today New Denmark presents a happy contrast to its bleak beginning. Every possible bit of land has been cleared and utilized. Sleek cattle graze in lush fields. Acre after acre of potatoes and golden grain stretch in all directions. Flowers bloom in front of every house. The residences are far more attractive than the average in a farming community. Behind carefully groomed lawns and surrounded by shrubs, hedges and trees, they sit well back from the road. Practically all have a new coat of paint. Every resident speaks English, few with any trace of accent, although Danish is the language in their homes. Canada's oldest Danish colony still draws settlers from the other side.

New Denmark has one of the best ski slides in Canada. A gasoline engine is used to hoist skiers up the slide, too steep to be climbed. On two occasions the settlement has turned out a Maritime ski champion. All youngsters learn the sport free. The man who made their fathers' and mothers' wooden shoes now makes skis, and the schoolyard is piled high with them in winter. Lads 11 and 12 years old take the big jump. Slightly older boys get distances up to 175 feet. Earl Christensen, 16, and Norwegian-born Chris Olsen each jumped 175 feet in trials last winter. The Canadian amateur record was far short of that mark.

Canadian Senator Suddenly Stricken

MONTREAL, Oct. 1—(CP)—The Hon. George P. Graham, elder member of the Canadian senate suffered a weak spell today while attending the funeral of Senator Rodolphe Lemieux.

Mr. Graham, now in his 79th year, suffered the spell as pallbearers carried the casket from St. James Cathedral to the hearse. Prime Minister Mackenzie King, who with Senator Graham were among the honorary pallbearers, reached out and helped others support Mr. Graham who was taken to a nearby hotel. He rested for a while and it was announced later that Senator Graham is feeling a lot better and has just finished lunch.
