Giant Starfinder Weighs 35 Tons

The last component of the largest telescope south of the Equator is about to leave England for the Radcliffe Observatory in Pretoria.

It is an enormous glass mirror and it was only completed at the fourth attempt. They took eighteen months to do the job.

This giant 74-inch reflecting astronomical telescope is a marvel for the perfection of its mechanical components and for the accuracy of its optical parts. The mirror, for example, achieves, in terms of light waves, an accuracy of twenty millionths of an inch.

The movable parts of this triumph of British science applied to industry weigh 35 tons, but such is the beauty of their workmanship that a single human finger can set the whole in motion.

NEW YORK FASHION SHOW HIGHLIGHTS NEW CASUAL LOOK

"Cameo" Beige — a deep, warm, rose - tinted beige — was launched recently at tea time in a style show in New York. Green, beige-to-brown and navy blue are the other major groups in which the clothes were divided.

Shoulders, which retain breadth, are slightly padded for a rounded line of dresses, coats, and suits. A representative suit which is developed in brown-with-white pin stripe men's wear worsted, has a deep shoulder yoke that gives a deep rounded line to the shoulders, and the chevron working of the fabric stripes in the sleeves accentuates the sloping effect.

Suits, the majority of them developed in slick-finished worsteds, have a gently or easy - fitted silhouette; suit jackets are about wrist - length, and straight - line skirts have straight knife pleats or bias pleats. The tubular silhouette is advanced in one beige, hard-finished worsted.

Dolman sleeves contribute the new casual look in dresses. They are emphasized in a representative beige dress by brown stripes going around the sleeves. This dress is in woollen jersey and has a long torso bodice and knife pleats all-around the skirt. Dolman sleeves with the sloping-shoulder register in dresses developed in stiff fabrics, such as faille or taffeta. And in dresses of these stiff fabrics the very wide full skirts continue.

Softer, dressmaker suits, coats or ensembles are developed in soft-handling woollen crepes, and a style detail of many of these is the braid trimming. The peplum silhouette advances for spring in a navy blue woollen dress with bolero, and a braid border outlines the short double peplum that stands way out around the hips and also outlines the waist-length bolero.

The light neutral tones of green are more emphasized than the very dark green. Light greens register in ensembles, and almost always in costumes green is combined with another color. Typical green treatment is the three-piece ensemble, consisting of pale green woollen dress with green-and-red plaid jacket, and brilliant red, finger-tip length cape. Capes are strongly recommended.

"Sporting" pink — deep but not harsh — is highlighted in tweed fashions for the country. The suit with blouse and skirt made in one piece is introduced.

In evening fashion, the dinner suit, developed in hard-finished worsted, is new for spring. One representative tailored evening suit is in beige twill and is worn with a white shirtwaist blouse with deep plunging neckline.

In daytime shoes, clog or platform soles contrast in color with the rest of the pump. In cutout black patent leather pumps the bow is placed on the heel rather than the toe.
