SMILES

DECIDEDLY SHY

Betty: Isn't May awfully shy when you have anything to say about her age?
 Best: Yes, shy about ten years, I think.

WHEN HE FEELS THAT WAY

Friend: Life's a terrible struggle. Do you ever feel as if you'd just as soon be drowned as out?
 Airman: Only when my plane gets engine trouble and starts to take a drop.

GEOLOGICALLY SPEAKING

Prof: So you have decided to take up geology as a life work? It requires plenty of grit.
 Stud: Yes, sir, but I have the sand.
 Prof: Good, but don't forget it's a rocky road.

VERY MUCH SO

Thimble: Really, Miss Spool, Miss Pincushion is terribly stuck up!

BETTER HAD!

"What would you do if you were in my shoes?"
 "I think I'd run for all I was worth."

"These Women"
 BY MALCOLM DUART

CHAPTER LIV

Morton sat on the top step of the stairs while he waited for Parrish to come from Audrey's rooms. The nurse placidly strolled up and down the hall for relaxation.

Nona had gone down to the drawing room. The minutes passed. The door to Audrey's chamber opened and Parrish came out. "She's been asleep a while," he said. The nurse passed in. The young man turned to Morton. "I kissed her before I came out," he said. "I wanted you to know it. She was asleep and didn't know."

He sat on the step beside the older man. Morton waited for him to continue. "I think you ought to know what she told me," Parrish went on. "She was very weak. She couldn't say much at a time."

He wiped his brow with his hand. "I had been under a strain and the perspiration had run out on his face, though the morning was cool. "She said there never was and never would be another man like you," he continued. "But she said she liked me. I was glad to have her say it—I don't deserve her friendship."

He glanced at Morton. "Why can't you marry her—why don't you? It will make her happy," Morton shifted to face the younger man. "John," he said, "it is impossible. I love her as one loves a child. But I can't marry her."

Parrish leaned his elbows on his knees and gazed absently down the stairway. "I told her I loved her and wanted to marry her," he said. "What did she say?" Parrish frowned gloomily. "I shouldn't have said it to her," he said. "It was too much. She reached out her hand to me and closed Parrish's hand. "That's all she said, and she went to sleep again. He hesitated. "I wanted a little while, holding her hand. Then I kissed her and came out."

It was evening, although it was not yet dark. They passed the theatre where Nona was playing. The electric sign had been lighted and Nona's name in brilliant letters glowed in the twilight.

"Look!" said Audrey, plucking the nurse by the sleeve. "Isn't it wonderful to be famous?" "I wish I'd gone on the stage and instead of training as a nurse," "And I'll bet at this moment that Nona would rather be a nurse than a dancer," Morton said, smiling. "I know she would have liked to come with Audrey."

"If only we could trade places!" said the nurse, wistfully. "A private railroad car had been set out on a side track for Morton and Audrey and the nurse. Parrish was waiting at the station. As the machine drew up he appeared, with a negro, pushing a wheel chair.

Bending in the open door, he offered his arms to Audrey. She arose weakly, supported by Morton, and Parrish took her. Instead of placing her in the waiting chair, however, he went on carrying her through the gate and down the platform to where the private Pullman was waiting. The nurse and Morton followed behind. The porter descended, placing his portable step in position to help. Parrish motioned him away with his hand. Carefully he mounted the steps and carried her into the car. The rear end of it was open, as an observation room. Next to it was a chamber, larger than the ordinary drawing room, and in this there was a bed, already made up. With tender care he laid Audrey on it.

actively at the engine man, who cheerily waved back. They were drawn down the track, past a switch, and then were pushed into their place at the end of the train which was to take them to New York.

"Send a telegram," said Morton, as the yard engine drew away. "Send it to the president of the road. I know him. Tell him I want to thank the engineer of Engine 2448 for extraordinary courtesy and care."

Parrish swung off the train and trotted to the telegraph office. The train was slowly moving as he leaped again upon the platform. "Darn near everybody is a good scout," he said, earnestly, as he discussed the thoughtful engine man with Morton.

"The lesson number one in that great course entitled 'How to Live!' replied Morton, laughing. They transported Audrey from the station to her New York home with as great care as they showed the evening before in Toronto. The household maid was awaiting them at the gate. "I'm glad to see you looking so well, miss," she said. Audrey extended her hand from the wrappings that covered her, and greeted the girl.

"I'm so happy to get home," she said. She insisted on being placed on the front porch. Presently, her hand extended against the wall, she walked slowly to the end of the veranda and looked at the flowers blooming beneath her. "I want to be housekeeper," she said, turning to Morton. She pointed to the flower bed. "I planted these flowers, you know, laddy, and look how they've grown!"

Carefully she returned to her chair and sank into it. "The doctor says you HAVE to be a housekeeper," her guardian told her. "But listen," he teased, "will I have to eat your cooking?" "I want to learn that, too. I want to be a housekeeper," she said. There were tears in her eyes, and he hastily changed the subject. "Here come some of our neighbors," he said, nodding toward the street. She looked. It was the couple from next door—the folk who had refused to recognize them the last time they returned to Toronto. Audrey leaned forward, prepared to greet them, and Morton looked at them, smiling. The man and woman slowed their pace when they saw the girl.

their Lord, they were last at the cross, and first at the tomb. Some say the Church is not a factor in the life of the people that modern amusements is uppermost with so many—but in spite of all this frivolity, Christ is still the greatest power in the world. We are proud that we belong to the Presbyterian Church, but prouder still that we are members of the Church of Christ.

There has been many red-letters in the history of this "Old Church" and this one will be numbered among them by all those who were privileged to hear Dr. Campbell's eloquent address. The members of this W. M. S. wish to thank the Kensington quartette, Mr. and Mrs. Ramsay, Miss Dalziel and Mr. Hiltz who so beautifully sang, "We will follow Him," also Mrs. Angus Green and Mrs. George Ryle of Clifton, who rendered a charming duet, "Oh! What a Friend," special thanks are due Miss Anna Ryle of Clifton the accompanist for the evening.

In Memoriam
 MR. ALFRED H. MCEWEN.

The death occurred in Ch'town, on July 30th of Mr. Alfred H. McEwen, a former resident of Bristol, Lot 46. Deceased, who was in his 54th year because in three years ago and after undergoing medical treatment, for a time seemed to improve, but he never fully regained his former health and vigor and the end came quite suddenly on the above mentioned date. Mr. McEwen was a man of sterling principles and high ideals. He was the very soul of truth and honor, and was much respected for his honesty and uprightness in all his dealings with his fellow men, of a retiring, unassuming disposition, his gentle loveable qualities were best known to his relatives and intimate friends by whom he was much beloved. His funeral was held on Sunday Aug. 1st from the residence of his brother, Mr. Hammond McEwen to Lot 40 church. Service was conducted by Rev. Mr. Chalmers of the United Church, Mr. Stewart, and his remains followed by a large concourse of people were tenderly laid to rest in West St. Peter's cemetery, there to await the resurrection morn when the shadows flee away and those angel faces smile which we have loved long since and lost a while.

FOR GIRLS WHO WORK
 Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Is a Great Friend—It Stops Pain and Restores Health

Ontario. "I work in a factory and I would have to get away from my work every time I was sick. The dragging-down pains and cramps were very bad, but my back was terrible. It hurt so that I couldn't stand with it. I heard some of the girls talking about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and they told me to try it. I have taken about a dozen bottles of it and it has done me a lot of good. I never have any pain or sore back now, and I have been off from work a day since I have taken it. I recommend the Vegetable Compound when I have the opportunity."—Miss ROLLO, 21 Howie Avenue, Toronto, Ontario.

resumed, until the early hours of the morning, when all departed for their homes, with the firm belief that Mr. Alyward can do his share toward the social side of life, and hoping that it will not come too long until he entertains again.

MALPEQUE

Rev. A. N. and Mrs. Gillis, who have been in attendance at the interdenominational conference in Sackville, are expected here this week to spend a few days previous to their leaving for Truro, N. S. Mr. Gillis will preach his farewell services on Sunday, Aug. 29th. There will be special music at both services, but the addresses will be of very great interest to all.

Rev. James A. Ramsay of St. John's church, Moncton, N. B. addressed an interested audience in Malpeque church on Friday evening at the Thank Offering service of the Hamilton Auxiliaries of the W. M. Society. The thoughts "God is the only true and living God," "God is a righteous God," and "God is God of love," formed the basis of a splendid and individualized realization of the responsibility of the evangelization of the world. The people of this country side regard it as a privilege to hear Mr. Ramsay in him as he was one of our Hamilton boys of whom we are justly proud because of the large place he fills in the life and work of our church. Miss Rogers of Hamilton added to the interest of the programme by the rendition of the "Beautiful Isle of Somewhere."
