Sarnia, Ont.—"In young motherhood Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription has been of great benefit to me as a tonic and nerve. Whenever I feel in a rundown, nervous condition, a bottle of the 'Prescription' tones up my entire system quicker than any other medicine I have ever taken, and it keeps me well. I heartily recommend this medicine to women who are in a debilitated condition. It is a safe and reliable tonic and nerve, always dependable."—Mrs. Laura Henderson, 224 Cotterbury St.

WILD HORSES

By Henry Herbert Knibbs

"That you, Miss Johnson?" came in Johnny's robust voice. Then he stepped close to the closed door.

"If you will hang your coat on the doorknob, I'll come and get it, and mend it," said Miss Percival.

"Good-night," said Miss Percival. Johnny blinked, ran his fingers through his damp hair, stared at the doorknob.

"All right. And thanks." He listened with his head close to the door. "She said, 'Good-night.' She thinks I had that little argument with Lopez on her account. Well, Frank's kind of include her in what he called me a Spanish Shucks! I got to tell her different."

Johnny put on the clean shirt which he had carried rolled in his satchel, combed his hair, brushed his boots with one of Mrs. Johnson's neatly ironed towels, and catching up his coat, strode out and hung the garment on the doorknob of the room up the hall.

"Good-evening," came from the depths of the veranda. He turned into Mrs. Johnson, who stood just behind him, recovered herself, and stepped aside as he apologized.

"Dad's out—somewhere. He left right after supper. Won't you come in?"

"Thanks. It's right pleasant out here on the steps. I'll wait a few minutes. Maybe your father will be back soon. How is that little coyote I fetched in from the Black Mesa?"

"Oh, he's as tame as a coyote ever gets. I'm going to let him go."

"Guess that's right, Miss Baker. I fetched him in to you because I didn't want to kill the little snake—but I ought to do it. Johnny rolled a cigarette and smoked it. "Baker, because she—"

"Oh, haven't you gone yet?" She laughed. Johnny swung away, his back stiff, his boot heels clicking down the gravel path.

"Damn Frank Lopez!" he muttered. It scarcely occurred to Johnny that in quarrelling with Julia Baker when she was simply teasing him, he was admitting that he cared considerably for her opinion.

And he could hardly be supposed to know that Julia's slight interest in him that she herself would have denied to any one but herself. Julia Baker was rather plump, practical, fair-haired, gray-eyed—a girl loyal to her community while realizing its shortcomings.

She had her own house, a good kitchen for her father, who was a widower. Simpson the clerk would have been glad to marry her. Julia was exceedingly fond of Johnny Trent.

Shortly after Johnny left Mrs. Johnson's to call at the Baker's, Miss Percival stepped quietly from her room and down the hallway. Johnny's coat was not hanging on the doorknob for the very good reason that Mrs. Johnson was busy mending the slashed sleeve in her own room.

knew him so well, did not again invite him to come up and sit on the veranda with her, but came and sat beside him on the steps.

"They had been friends for a long time, ever since they were children. Then Johnny had called her Julia, but of late he always addressed her as Miss Baker."

"This evening Johnny felt peculiarly un- like himself, in that he could find nothing to say to Julia whom he had always liked and admired for her frankness."

"Did you really have a fight with Frank Lopez, this evening?" Her question startled him, annoyed him.

"Who's been telling you that?" he asked sharply.

"Why, everybody in town knows it. Simpson told father. Simpson said he thought you fought about that woman from Chicago—that Frank Lopez insulted her, or something."

"Well, there wasn't any fight—regular. Frank and I had a word or two."

"Oh, it doesn't really matter. She's awfully pretty, though, isn't she?"

"She's kind of interesting—and different. I last met her to-day." Johnny's tone was deliberately casual.

"Dad told us you were going to take charge of the road work. I suppose you'll stay at Mrs. Johnson's this summer?"

"I figured to. I'll be there even- ings."

"Mrs. Johnson's place is interesting—and different," declared Julia, somewhat caustically.

Johnny glanced at her, and he saw her smile. Johnny frowned.

"If you're meaning Mrs. Johnson's is different since Miss Percival came to board there—it sure is."

"I'm awfully glad," sighed Julia. "And likewise sarcastic," said Johnny.

"Really? I didn't know it. Would you call it sarcastic if I offered to mend your coat? Jimmy Simpson said that Lopez slashed your sleeve with his knife, when you were having that little word or two."

"Thanks," said Johnny stiffly. "But it just so happens that my coat is being mended right now. Guess your dad ain't coming back right away. I'll be saying good-night."

And Johnny rose and raised off his hat with the formality of offended youth.

He strode down the path a pace or two, then turned. "Good-night, Miss Julia."

"Oh, haven't you gone yet?" She laughed. Johnny swung away, his back stiff, his boot heels clicking down the gravel path.

bed, his elbows on his knees, his chin in his hands. It struck him suddenly that he wasn't a millionaire, nor well-to-do, or even able to command a decent salary.

"Now I wonder how she came to pick on me—right from the start?" he asked himself. "It can't be for my money—so it must be my good looks." He grinned boyishly.

Miss Percival heard a vigorous chant coming from the end of the hall. "You can quit your boss till his eye rolls white. But I'll be far away." (To Be Continued.)

Making The Home Town Known

The influence of the newspaper on the development of natural resources is probably not as generally appreciated as it should be by the public.

Newspapers do a vast amount of publicity work for their individual localities, and the spread of this information has been, in many cases, the cause of interest being created in an undeveloped resource, says the Natural Resources Service of the Department of the Interior.

The home paper editor should likewise be credited with a large amount of local interest in towns and villages of Canada, in that he is keen to see his locality prosperous and progressive. Without a local voice this advancement is impossible.

In many of our smaller municipalities there are conditions that, were they known, would be an inducement for capital to become interested. Self advertising is not a fault when applied to the improvement of the home town, particularly the development of local natural resources.

At the annual meeting of the Dominion Land Surveyors Hon. Charles Stewart, Minister of the Interior, said that he had the greatest admiration for the men who were attracting attention to the development of Canada's natural resources.

In this Mr. Stewart was right saying what all public men are thinking. The men who are editing our newspapers are doing a work for Canada's advancement that entitles them to the greatest credit.

TOKIO, March 23.—On condition that he be given an income of 12,000 yen a year for life, Kumataro Ishigaki has given his entire fortune of about 1,000,000 yen to the Marine Products Society to be used in the encouragement of fisheries. Mr. Ishigaki is 67 years of age and amassed his fortune in the fishing industry.

This is said to be the only case in Japan of an entire fortune of such size to be given away in its owner's lifetime.

MORE HUMOURS OF HISTORY By ARTHUR MORELAND

A. D. 1085-6. William was a taxation expert, and his survey, preserved in the Rolls Office, provided him with a reliable basis for his exactions. The record covers the whole of England, except Northumberland, Cumberland, Westmoreland and Durham, then a separate government. The other Northern counties, Yorkshire, Lancashire and Cheshire, are omitted as waste lands.

COLOR CUT-OUTS Little Snow-White

Read today's chapter of the story of "Snow-White." Then cut out and color the dress for the wicked queen, Snow-White's step-mother. If you save these cut-outs every day you'll have paper dolls with which you can act out the whole story of "Snow-White."

One morning Little Snow-White was working busily in the tiny cottage where she lived with the seven little dwarfs of the forest. There was a knock at the door.

Snow-White ran to the window and saw outside an old pedlar woman with long laces and silks. She never dreamed that the pedlar woman was really the queen, her jealous step-mother, who had lured her face and put on an old gray dress and veil.

Snow-White unbolted the door and let the pedlar woman in. She bought a pretty bodice and the pedlar woman offered to lace her up for her. The old woman laced her up so quickly and so tightly that all her breath went, and she fell down as though dead.

"Now I am most beautiful," said the queen, and hurried away. (Will Snow-White die? Read COLOR CUT-OUTS tomorrow to see.)

IN MEMORIAM

EDITH BLANCH FORD

The death occurred at Glasgow Road of Edith Blanch, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Garnet Ford. She was born Nov. 25th, and her little sweet short earthly life passed to its eternal rest in the morning of Thursday Jan. 15, 1925 at the age of seven weeks.

Little Edith leaves to mourn besides her father and mother three sisters: Elsie, Mabel, Winnie and her brother Melvine. Up to a couple of days before her death she was a bright and lovable child the sunbeam of the home so the place in the hearts of her loved ones will long be vacant. Everything possible was done but to no avail her innocent soul passed away to be held fast forever. The funeral was held on Jan. 16th, was conducted by Rev. C. Graham. Interment was in Winslow North Cemetery.

Washing, D. C. March 20, 1925.—With the formal granting of a charter to the Ruseh School of Fox Breeding—there was inaugurated the first educational institution in the United States to impart adequate instruction about the Silver Fox Industry. For several years the need for such a school has been apparent, but only lately has this popular movement progressed to the point of realization.

In announcing the opening, V. A. Tompkins, Secretary of the School, explained that "it is a non-profit enterprise, founded by Mr. Louis Edward Ruseh of Washington, D. C., a leader in the Silver Fox industry—the school is designed to impart comprehensive information about Silver animal and pelt for higher grade animal and pelt for the fashionable neck-pieces. Special attention is to be devoted to fitting students to fill positions on large fox ranches, lists of which are already on file at the School, and the demand for trained men is continually increasing."

The American Fox Institute also sponsors and is to partially direct the School in its educational and research work for the industry. Educators, prominent business and professional men all over the country have expressed their approval and their willingness to

Acids In Stomach Cause Indigestion

Create Gas, Sourness and Pain How To Treat

Medical authorities state that nearly ten-tenths of the cases of stomach trouble, indigestion, sourness, burning, gas, bloating, nausea, etc., are due to an excess of hydrochloric acid in the stomach and not as some believe to a lack of digestive juices. The delicate stomach lining is irritated, digestion is delayed and food sours, causing the disagreeable symptoms which every stomach sufferer knows so well.

Artificial digestants are not needed in such cases and may do real harm. Try laying aside all digestive aids and instead get from any druggist a few ounces of Bisurated Magnesia and take a teaspoonful in a quarter glass of water right after eating. This sweetens the stomach, prevents the formation of excess acid and there is no sourness, gas or pain. Bisurated Magnesia (in powder or tablet form—never liquid or milk) is harmless to the stomach, inexpensive to take and is the most effective form of magnesia for stomach purposes. It is used by thousands of people who enjoy their meals with no more fear of indigestion.
