At the proper time and place when publishing the report of the Kensington meeting held on Friday last, facts' was inadvertently made of the fact that the entire report was telephoned to The Guardian immediately after the meeting, and so satisfactorily was this accomplished that every word was typed written as quickly as sent over the phone and the copy was handed in to the compositor within five minutes after the last word was received. It is a pleasure to be able to testify to the excellent condition of the Western trunk line at the present time. Messages are received with ease and every word distinctly heard—a vast improvement over the conditions of a year ago.

At the Supreme Court yesterday the arguments on the demurrers in the cases of McMurrer and Matthews against Jenkins was concluded, and judgment reserved. In the case of Beers vs. Long, an action for breach of warranty on the sale of a horse, Mr. Johnstone made application for a rule for a new trial which was refused. No judgment was given in the application of P. P. Gillis for certiorari, and the court adjourned sine die. It is understood that applications are pending at Chambers for habeas corpus to release McMurrer from confinement and for writs of certiorari to set aside the search warrants and orders for destruction of liquor in the McMurrer and Matthews cases.

AN argument in favor of the tunnel which is much more sensible than the "pip" dream stupidly put forward by some parties is contained in the following little story: A lover and his lass were travelling by rail when the train entered a long dark tunnel. When it emerged into the light of day again the lover remarked: "That tunnel cost a million dollars to build, Sweetness." To which Sweetness replied: "It's worth every cent of it."
