Dorothy Dix Says—

LAMENTING WAR MOTHERS ARE OBJECTS OF CONTEMPT

They Owe It To Their Soldier Sons To Put Up A Brave Fight At Home

DEAR MISS DIX—What is your opinion of a mother who goes about crying on the shoulder of every person who let her because her married son has been drafted? She refuses to go to a party, even to a movie or listen to the radio or read the newspapers because there is so much in them about the war. She declares that until her son is returned home to his family she will not go anywhere or indulge in any pleasure. One would think that she is the only woman in the world who has been called upon to make this sacrifice.

I have two sons who are not of draft age, but who have voluntarily through when her son marches forth to battle. But I am not bemoaning my fate; on the contrary, I am not and I never will. I have many lonely hours and miss those two sons dreadfully, but I know there are millions of other mothers who are far worse off than I am. I try to keep my troubles to myself. I go to places of amusement and try to divert myself as much as possible and not to pass on to others any depression I may feel. Don't you think I am taking a wiser course than my friend?

A WAR MOTHER.

ANSWER—Indeed you are. Nobody minimizes the suffering that every woman goes through when her son marches forth to battle. She knows the hardships he must suffer, the dangers he must run and the chances there are that he may never come back. After all, the proportion of soldiers who are injured or slain in the war is small compared to the total number in the armed forces. In the last war I knew a woman who was in the army.

She could neither eat nor sleep because of picturing him shivering and cold in a trench in France or lying dead on a battlefield. There was no strategy of the matter for her. She was a mother and she was a woman. Yet when the war ended and he was returned to her, he had not been out of this country; he had never heard a gun fired; had never so much as caught a cold, or hurt his finger in the service of his country.

It has been said that a coward dies a thousand deaths, the brave man dies but one. Every boy in the army who stays at home and nurses his fears as it is of the man who is a craven in the army. The woman who has the courage to meet her responsibility and do her duty does not, in reality, suffer half so much as the winner and complainer who magnifies her sacrifices and calls upon everybody to sympathize with her. The courageous woman has the consolation of her own self-respect and the admiration and respect of all who know her, whereas the weakling mother who wants some other woman to go out to defend her and her child is an object of universal contempt.

Unless a boy is as weak and flabby-soiled as his mother, she makes life very hard for him. Every boy in the army who stays at home and nurses his fears as it is of the man who is a craven in the army. The woman who has the courage to meet her responsibility and do her duty does not, in reality, suffer half so much as the winner and complainer who magnifies her sacrifices and calls upon everybody to sympathize with her. The courageous woman has the consolation of her own self-respect and the admiration and respect of all who know her, whereas the weakling mother who wants some other woman to go out to defend her and her child is an object of universal contempt.

It takes a brave and unselfish woman to smile in these days, to be cheerful and to keep up the morale of all with whom she comes in contact by saying something gay and pleasant instead of telling them a tale of woe. It takes courage to write an amusing letter to one's son when one's heart is breaking, but that's the kind of mothers we need.

Everyone is filled with pity for the mothers whose sons are at the front. The head is sorrow and their drink is tears in these times, but they make a bad matter worse when they fill the world with their lamentations. Every mother of a soldier owes it to him, to her country and to those about her to put up as brave a fight at home as she does at the front.

COWARDS DIE MANY TIMES

DEAR MISS DIX—My husband and I have been married three years. He is a good provider. We have a nice home, a lovely baby and are quite happy together. But there is one thing we never can agree about and that is what we shall do on Sundays and his days off. He always wants to spend them at home fiddling around in the backyard, or doing something about the house or in resting and relaxing while I want to go somewhere. When I nag him into taking me he does it so ungraciously it takes all the pleasure out of it.

He feels that I am silly to make an issue of this and that I should not object to his enjoying his free time playing ball or doing exactly as he wants to.

You, too, are entitled to one day off a week from cooking and washing and baby tending, and to spend it at the beauty shop or in the movies or having an orgy in the department store and lunch at a restaurant. Such being the case and you two being reasonable human beings, why can't you talk it all over and agree on having different days off instead of quarrelling over it? Believe me you would have a better time going alone than you would together, for nothing is so aggravating as to have a companion who is acting like a martyr when you are trying to enjoy yourself.

Now that you've cleaned every and arranged neatly in such a manner of available scrap from the attic that they will not be obstacles and turned it over to some local authority. You can make me come running when she whistles.

A Morning Smile

PLEASE, MOSES

Hitler looted Michelangelo's "Moses" from the Louvre and carried it off to Berchtesgaden. When asked by his associates why he had stolen this particular treasure, he replied: "Oh, it's a great piece of art you know."

But one of the Gestapo, spying on the boss, has reported another explanation. He saw the Fuehrer on his knees before the great Jew and he was saying: "Dear Moses, tell us how to get across that strip of water!"

A parson diminutive in size, and with head covered with hair of the most fiery hue, officiated one Sunday for a friend in a remote colliery village.

Dining Rules for Hostess and Guest

Seating Guests at Dinner

How delightfully some women fill the role of hostess while others are baffled by such a simple etiquette problem as seating guests at a small dinner party!

Simple to remember that the woman guest of honor sits at the right of the hostess, and the man guest of honor sits at the right of the woman guest.

To direct guests to their places, you need only say, "Will you sit here, Mr. Jones," indicating the place with a slight gesture.

course, you avoid seating husbands and wives together—or two women or two men.

Another moment that can be awkward is the start of the dinner. Should guests or hosts delay eat until everyone is served? No, wanderers, and it is now established that those in the Gulf of Mexico migrate around the tip of Florida and up the Atlantic coast and back again every year.

You'll want to be sure of using knives, forks and spoons correctly, too. One rule to remember—take only one sip with your tea or coffee spoon. Drink from the cup.

Brush up on fine points of table etiquette! Our 32-page booklet gives rules for formal dinners, tea or buffet parties, clubs, restaurants and Tell correct silver for different courses, when fingers are correct how to eat unusual foods.

Send 20c in coins for your copy of "Good Table Manners" to The Guardian Home Service. Be sure to write plainly your name, address and the name of booklet.

THE VALUABLE SHRIMP It is sometimes the case that a man is called a "poor shrimp," but it is really a reflection on the shrimp, which while small, is by no means of little value. Shrimps and prawns are practically the same, the larger being called prawns, and the smaller shrimps. The shrimp is as transparent as glass, all the internal organs being clearly visible.

Hitler "Rewards" Dieppe People

NEW YORK, Sept. 13—(AP)—With everything done to remind them of Hitler's "graciousness" in granting freedom, a special train crowded with French war prisoners from Dieppe and its vicinity arrived in Normandy Saturday, a reward to the citizens of that region for behaving themselves during the Canadian-led raid on Dieppe last month.

But with all the ceremony calculated to stress the good-conduct reward angle, the fact remained that the BBC during the raid constantly told the Dieppe people to remain in their homes and take no part in the fighting for fear of reprisals such as were visited on the populace after a Commando raid on St. Nazaire.

Apparently mindful of the Allied warnings, Dieppe residents took no part in the action—and this greatly pleased Hitler, who interpreted it as collaboration with him.

The Berlin radio broadcast that the prisoners, released from German prison camps upon Hitler's special orders, were given an official reception at a station between Rouen and Dieppe.
