OYSTER FARMING

A most interesting meeting was held yesterday afternoon when oyster fishermen, representatives of area leasing companies, and members of the Government had an interchange of views on questions affecting the industry. The meeting had been called primarily for the purpose of ventilating alleged grievances of the fishermen, but it soon developed into a round-table conference in which schemes for the preservation of the oyster industry and its development along the most profitable lines were discussed. Great credit is due to Mr. L. P. Tanton for the way in which he handled the meeting and brought it to such an amicable and satisfactory conclusion. Mr. Tanton can remember the time when oysters were so plentiful here that they could be bought at $1.50 per barrel; in fact he has shipped thousands of barrels at that price. Now, according to Major Bartlett, a small barrel costs $13 in Summerside, and the reason simply is this, that the beds have been so depleted that no more than from 50 to 100 barrels per season, of Malpeque oysters, can be fished from the open beds by legitimate means. Mr. Tanton assured the meeting that generally speaking the fishermen favored leasing of areas as introduced by the Government, recognizing that it was going to be of great advantage to both fishermen and companies alike. The companies, with the greater capital at their command, will be able to develop the markets in which the fishermen will benefit. All that they require is equal liberties and equal privileges under the regulations, and in this the Premier readily acquiesced, provided the fishermen would agree among themselves what was most advantageous to all concerned. The regulations are made by the Federal Government, but he is quite prepared to use his influence to get the wishes of the fishermen regarding them complied with. What the Government has to consider is not the easiest and most opportune method of disposing of obstacles which arise in dealing with this great and important industry, but what is best in the interests of the fishermen and the Island for the future. It is a very large question and requires careful handling and discussion. The meeting, therefore, adopted a wise resolution when it unanimously agreed to appoint a committee to consider a constitution for the formation of an Oystermen's Association, when all the questions relating to the industry will be fully and carefully discussed and the results of the deliberations conveyed to the Government. We are on the eve of great developments and it is the part of wisdom for all parties concerned to come together in one organization for the purpose of conserving their interests.

The meeting was one of the most representative held for some time, and the free interchange of views did more to remove misunderstandings and misapprehensions than would have been possible by volumes of literature on the subject.

QUALITY COUNTS,

The provincial exhibition which closes today furnishes perhaps above all things else, an object lesson in the value of quality. Over the whole show, whether in product of the soil, of handicraft, in animals, in attractions—fake or otherwise—is written the legend "quality counts."

There was a time in the history of this province, as in that of many others, when prizes were awarded for the biggest potatoes, the biggest mangels, the biggest turnips, the rankest grain stalks, the fattest animals, regardless of the fact that the biggest vegetables were hollowhearted and valueless and that the fattest animals had been spoon fed for the exhibition and rendered unfit for the purposes which they were supposed to serve.

This system has gone the way of the sanded oats, the bricked butter tub and the wooden nutmeg. Today quality, rather than appearance, is what counts and prizes are awarded accordingly. And greater than exhibition prizes have fallen to those who have made quality their standard. Permanency and prosperity have invariably followed.

When the farmers of Prince Edward Island, as a whole, realize—as many of them do today—that quality alone is the real foundation upon which they can successfully build, it will be a long step towards general prosperity. There are those still who, for the sake of the dollar in sight, would "sand their oats" or "brick their butter" and so sacrifice their future business. This has been done in various ways and by different persons—not so long ago as to be entirely forgotten—to their own injury and to that of the province. The ruin of the Island's once great oat trade with Great Britain on account of the dishonest methods of a few who wanted to sell sand for oats, has not been forgotten, nor has it been forgotten that merchants in our neighboring provinces refused to handle Prince Edward Island hay at any price because of previous unhappy experiences. These things are now past history we trust, and may still serve as standing illustrations of the folly and the hurt of attempting to make money dishonestly.

The commercial value of quality has now become so thoroughly understood by our merchants and traders that they stand behind everything they send into the market, their name and guarantee on every package. In our grocery dealings this principle is also fully recognized. Every housekeeper knows what special brand of any commodity to ask for, because they know that the manufacturer's name is a guarantee of honesty.

When, in individual cases, the principle means so much, how much more would it mean if it applied to the province as a whole. What would it mean to the agricultural and industrial life of this province if the legend "made in Prince Edward Island," were a synonym for excellence, for honesty and purity, if all our products were so labelled and the label an official provincial guarantee that the article, if not as represented, would be taken back and the money refunded. This would be possible only under a system of inspection, a system which The Guardian has long advocated.

At present the inspection system is being taken advantage of by a few firms only and they have proved its value. Whatever they send to the market carries their name and with it the assurance that if the article is not as represented the price paid for it will be refunded. This system has been found a most profitable one as the names, so attached, have become known and their goods are being constantly asked for. When shall we have a system of registration which will mean that the words "made in Prince Edward Island" will stand for all that is implied in the one word "Quality."

NOTES.

Organization is in the Act—first foxes, now oysters.

Sleeping accomodation in the city was at a premium on Wednesday night. Many private citizens, "of their charity" placed their dwellings at the disposal of visitors who otherwise would have had to walk the streets.

Premier Mathieson offered to place the commodious public buildings at the disposal of the committee appointed to provide sleeping accomodation, but the suggestion came too late to be acted upon, as bedding could not be got at the late hour.

A correspondent writes:

"It has been remarked that apparently misfortune had dogged Mr. Lloyd George ever since he received a gift of a small consignment of Egyptian scarabs. In February 1912, a Glasgow man when in Egypt purchased a bracelet and ring of scarabs which were said to have been taken from a princess's tomb of very ancient date. That very day his wife became ill in Scotland, and upon his return she was still so indisposed that a specialist was consulted. This specialist asked for a scarab to give to a young lady who was interested in things Egyptian. This lady received the scarab. Two days later she was killed in a motor accident. Then the man who bought the scarabs fell ill himself, and everything seemed to go wrong. Eventually he returned the bracelet and the ring to Egypt, but kept some single scarabs which had been given to him by a friend and collector.

"As matters did not improve he resolved to gift the lot to a museum in London. On the way he met a friend, and to him he commenced to talk about the beetles, which this friend persisted in maintaining were lucky What followed (says a contemporary) I had better describe in my correspondent's own language:—

"I did not contradict him, and when he said he would like to buy some of mine to send to his political hero, Mr. Lloyd George, I replied that if that was their destination I would give them to him for nothing. I packed them up for him and saw him address them and also post them upon our arrival in London.

"Three days later Mr. Lloyd George was reported to have broken his thumb. Next, the house at Walton which was being built for him was burned down, and finally came the Marconi trouble.

"My wife and I are now well, and our good luck has returned. Of course, there is nothing in it, but keeping in mind other stories about scarabs these curious coincidences make the matter interesting."

MAINLY ABOUT PEOPLE

The Guardian deeply regrets to learn of the serious illness of Mr. Harry Smith, son of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Smith. Mr. Smith, who is at present in the P. E. I., Hospital, has proved himself a brilliant scholar and his illness coming as it does in the middle of his studies, is indeed to be regretted. The hope is that he may speedily regain his usual good health.

Lieut-Col. H. C. Lowther, Ottawa, who has been military secretary to His Royal Highness, the Duke of Connaught, for two years, will sail for England on October 2nd., to take command of his regiment, the first battalion of the Scots Guards, at Aldershot. He will be succeeded by Lieut.-Colonel F. Farquhar, D.S.O., of the Coldstream Guards who has arrived from England to take over his new duties. Lt.-Col. Farquhar obtained his D.S.O., for gallant service in the South African war He has had a distinguished military career. Later he will be joined by Mrs. Farquhar. They will reside in Rideau Cottage. Col. Lowther, his predecessor made many friends in Canada, and those who met him in Charlottetown, were impressed by his tact and urbanity in official matters and genial personality in social life.

IMPORTED FOXES

Sir:—Pardon me for taking up so much of your valuable space, but I have received a clipping which appeared in "The Moncton Times", something that will prove interesting to the fox-raisers of Prince Edward Island and which will serve somewhat to enlighten Mr. B. I. Rayner in regard to the value of the imported fox. The Moncton Times under the title of "Fox Recaptured" says:

"Frank F. Tuplin, the noted wealthy fox breeder of P. E. Island, passed through Moncton with a beautiful male black fox, which was trapped recently in Maine. The fox is supposed to be the original male of a pair which was brought from Alaska some two years ago, but which escaped from their owners, or to have originated from that pair. Mr. Tuplin says the fox is the best individual he has ever seen, the price paid being in the vicinity of $10,000. It possesses a beautiful, soft, long and silky coat of black, not one white hair appearing. This will be a very valuable addition to Mr. Tuplin's already largely stocked ranch, which contains 102 of the best Island blacks, including the best stock picked by himself from the Dalton ranch in 1911, which is so much advertised. Mr. Tuplin handles nothing but the best and is always on the alert for first-class goods for new blood and regards this fox as second to none in Canada." ...

I may say that my letter in yesterday's issue of your valuable paper has brought me quite a number of congratulations, from parties who are engaged in fox-raising and who are not so narrow-minded that they cannot appreciate good stock no matter from what source it is obtained.

I forgot to mention in my letter that the Cross foxes which I sold fast year have been very successful in breeding and have produced black and silver pups. The Cross fox proposition is one which it will pay the person with moderate means to look into as they can be obtained at a very low figure and there is every prospect of their throwing a percentage of blacks and silvers, and even should their offspring be only Cross foxes they would prove a paying proposition.

I am, Sir, etc.,
H. YEWDALL.

MODERN HAT STYLES AT MODERATE PRICES AT PATONS STORE

Paton's yesterday held an early display of fall hats which proved most inviting to the ladies of Charlottetown so inviting in fact that all day long the store was crowded with eager buyers.

All the sunniest of the bright early fall seems to be shining out of the new hats and materials and simply charming was the display with the quaint, odd little shapes and varied modes that New York suggests for the new season. Fashion offers bewitching styles in hats all black, others aglow with bright, warm colors—styles drawn from hats of centuries ago and millinery purely of present origin. In short, everything that is delightful, charmingly individual; whatever is appealing to exclusive taste in history or art is the vouge at Patons as their millinery Miss Beers has just returned from a trip to New York and has been busy for the last ten or twelve days getting ready for this priliminary opening.

Paton's grand winter opening does not take place for some weeks yet, the season being too early for the selection of a winter hat. The present showing affords a selection never before equalled and the prices for hats of such beauty and distinctiveness are moderate as the customers knows.

There are dozens upon dozens of smart hats including various, plush, velvets, and all the modish materials and felts, each with its smart bow feather, wing or mount fetchingly placed in a becomming manner.

The millinery is displayed on the second floor in the handsomely appointed carpet room which has been thoroughly renovated and repaired after the recent fire.

Visitors to the Exhibition are asked to visit this department and see the millinery there displayed.

PERRIN'S GLOVES.

It might be here mentioned that Perrins Gloves can be had here at 75c and the wearer who thus saves money may also win the $10 prize so widely talked about.
