AN AMERICAN TURKEY COUNTY
It is estimated that Cole County, Missouri, produced last year about 20,000 turkeys for market. The average price paid for the early deliveries was about $2 each. In some instances the birds were driven on foot to the trading centres, where they were sold for the St. Louis and Eastern markets.

THE JOHN R. DINNIS PEDIGREED FOXES LTD.

In this issue will be found an important announcement by the John R. Dennis Pedigreed Foxes Limited. It is scarcely necessary to mention anything in connection with this company except that Mr. John R. Dennis, the "Wizard Rancher" is at its head and that the foxes already in the ranch and those about to be added were born in the purple. Every animal in the foundation stock has a family tree that traces back through several generations to animals whose pelts brought the highest prices in the London market. These foxes are all registered in the books of the Prince Edward Island Fox Breeders Association. The eleven pairs proposed to be added are of the same strain and of the same blood. Out of the original stock, Mr. Dennis has already reaped a fortune. Similar fortunes are still possible—are in fact much more probable in the present stage of the fox business than when Mr. Dennis began fox ranching a few years ago.

The opportunity afforded investors to get in on the ground floor, into the most aristocratic fox families in the world, is likely to be quickly taken advantage of and there is every probability that all the stock offered will be snapped up in a very short time.

The fecundity of the foxes in the ranch has been phenomenal, and the fact that the same strains are being perpetuated, that no importations or experiments with outside stock will be permitted, is an assurance that the rapidly increase which built up the business from its commencement will continue, for, in the fox world especially, like begets like.

Readers of the Guardian are asked to read the announcement. It bristles with facts which need not be repeated here and contains most valuable information for fox intending investors.

The name of the John R. Dennis Pedigreed Foxes is too well known to require any boasting. Mr. Dennis' success is the best evidence that can be given of the quality of the foxes and of the method of ranching.
