

Cosmetics can do much to beautify, but the true basis of successful make-up is a flawlessly clear skin which comes from inner health. And one of the first rules of inner health is Inner Cleanliness which sparkling, bubbling, pleasant-tasting Andrews can give you.

Here's how Andrews does its healthful work:

FIRST... Andrews cleans and refreshes the mouth and tongue.
NEXT... Andrews sweetens sour stomach and corrects excess acidity.
THEN... Andrews works on the liver to check biliousness.
FINALLY... To complete your inner cleanliness, Andrews gently cleans the bowels. It sweeps away trouble-making poisons, corrects temporary constipation.

CHAPTER X

The Magnolia Room was on the sixth floor of the city's most popular department store. For an On a blazing hot day the dim green walls splashed with the cool beauty of giant magnolia blossoms cupped in their thick dark green leaves, tables like small white pools with shaded lamps, and with neat-looking mulatto girls in print dresses and white aprons to serve the delectable food. It was not odd that Lissa and Ann were at a small table, and the pleasant little mulatto girl took their order and departed.

Lissa said, her slim hands folded on the table. "I haven't seen you around much lately. I mean at the night spot."
"It's so hot — and I've been pretty busy," answered Ann evasively. "Oh, yes, an engaged girl and her touseau," said Lissa, and smiled, though not with her eyes. "When's the great day? Or haven't you set the date yet?"
Ann hesitated and then she said evenly, "No — we haven't set the date yet."

Lissa laughed. "Well, if I were in your place, I wouldn't lose any time. Dr. Frazier's darning attractive, and with so many men away at the war, he's likely to be snatched up any minute," she suggested lightly.
"I'm not worried," said Ann, and meant it, though not, of course, the way Lissa took it.
"He, wait up!" protested Lissa, shocked. "That's no way for an engaged gal to talk! What do you mean — you're not worried. That you are so sure of him? You're sure no other girl could take him? That is lying in the face of fate, to hurt a challenge like that!"
"I — didn't mean it quite like that," said Ann evenly.

Lissa studied her shrewdly. "You mean that since you are not in love with him, anyway," she began, but Ann stiffened and straightened.
"I'd rather not discuss it, if you don't mind," she said stiffly, added deliberately, "Have you read any good books lately?"
Lissa tipped back her chair and laughed richly as at some delectable joke.
"You are transparent, aren't you?" she said flatly. "You're not one shred in love with Lyn Frazier — but you're completely mad about Tracy!"

"How dare you?" protested Ann. "Then why in Heaven's name don't you marry the man?" demanded Lissa sharply. "Tracy's completely off his head about you — and if you are in love with him —"
"I suppose you wouldn't have any idea why Tracy hasn't asked me to marry him?" asked Ann. Lissa looked at her shrewdly.
"Unless because you're engaged to Dr. Frazier — Tracy's pretty much a nut about loyalty and stuff," she returned carelessly.

Ann said deliberately, "Tracy feels under such obligations to you, that he will not even consider — marrying someone else — just — on the off-chance that some day you may — need him —"
Studying Lissa, Ann said dryly, "I suppose you had not the faintest idea that Tracy felt so obligated to you?"
Lissa's eyes widened a little and she started to look surprised and hurt, and then she relaxed, grinned and said with a little shrug, "Oh, I knew something about it but I did not dream he'd go to such lengths. I mean I've turned to him for help when the going got a bit tough; he sent for me to come down here as soon as he got the job on the Oquir, because I was out of a job and bored stiff and at a loose end. But — goodness, there's no reason for him to stay single on my account. After all, I could help to him for help even if he was married."

"Not if he were married to me, you couldn't," said Ann impulsively, and was a little startled because she hadn't meant to say it. But the picture of Tracy, as her husband, receiving "yells for help" from a lovely but reckless and careless Lissa, and resorting to her, was a little too much.
Lissa smiled, pleased at the thought that Ann was jealous of her. "But my dear, she protested prettily, "I'm not in the least in love with Tracy. He's a sweet old thing and I'm terribly fond of him, but I haven't the faintest objection to his marrying you, if he wants to!"

On their way out of the room, half an hour later, there were a number of women chatting in the foyer, talking for tables, and among them was a slender blonde with too much make-up, wearing a sheer, thin black frock and an enormous black catwinkle hat. As Ann made her way through the group she came face to face with the blonde, who started and shrank a little, before she recovered herself and so said hastily, "Oh — hello, Ann —"
And Ann said evenly, "Hello, Julie."

There was a tiny faint smile, and Lissa looked curiously from Ann to Julie and then back to Lissa, who expected to see introduced.
"Julie, this is Miss Marven, Lissa Mrs. Barton!"
