MANDATE FOR ACTION ON 9 PROBLEMS GIVEN CONGRESS BY VOTERS IN ELECTION

Polls Show No Desire For Change in U. S. Foreign Policy.

By American Institute of Public Opinion

PRINCETON, N. J., Dec. 11 — If all the voters in U. S. A. had had a chance to vote last Tuesday on foreign policy, strike control, taxes, military training and other vital issues facing the nation, how would they have voted?

While such a referendum actually was not held through official balloting, it was accomplished unofficially on American Institute poll ballots where voters were asked not only to state their preference for candidates, but also to give their views on the vital public issues of today.

The results indicate what sort of mandate the electorate has given the newly chosen Congress.

The accuracy of these informal referenda on issues was tested by the Congressional election itself, with the Institute's forecast of the party division of popular vote coming within 2 per cent.

If the newly-elected House of Representatives is truly to represent the will of the majority of voters, here is what the voters would like to see done:

1. Tuesday's election outcome was in no sense a mandate to change our foreign policy. It did not signify that the country is seriously divided over that policy.
2. The country has given the new Congress an unmistakable mandate to control and regulate strikes and labor unions; calling off all strikes for one year; prohibiting strikes in public utilities; a 30-day cool-off period before any strike can be called, with investigation of the issues during the waiting period; compulsory arbitration of labor disputes if labor and management cannot come to agreement by themselves. There is also widespread sentiment to outlaw judicial strikes and to curb "featherbedding" or make-work practices by unions.
3. Universal military training in peacetime has the "go ahead" signal from the American people. Fourteen surveys conducted by the Institute on the peacetime training issue during the past three years all found sentiment in favor by a ratio of 5-to-2 or more.
4. The new Congress has been given no clear mandate to reduce income taxes; in fact, a small majority of voters with opinions on the subject say they are in favor of delaying reduction of taxes until some of the public debt is paid off.
5. In spite of the unmistakable swing to the right politically which the election showed, the country has not swung away completely from social and economic reform.
6. For example, voters have, in a sampling referendum, signified their approval of legislation to raise the minimum wage level of the country from the present 40 cents an hour to 66 cents.
7. Another desired reform is extension of Social Security to include groups not now covered by the Act, such as farmers, government employees, professional and self-employed persons, domestic servants and others. Such extension has the approval of a large majority of voters.
8. The election cannot, however, be taken as a mandate to institute widespread government reforms in the field of health, insurance, public opinion polls have shown that public thinking is not yet crystallized on the question of government-sponsored medical insurance, but there is overwhelming sentiment favoring Federal aid for the building of hospitals to be run by local medical authorities throughout the nation.
9. Tuesday's election was in no sense a criticism of U. S. military occupation policies abroad, nor did it mean that the voters want to "bring our boys home" from Germany or Japan. A recent test of public opinion found 80 per cent of the country opposed to pulling U. S. troops out of Europe, and 81 per cent opposed to removing them from Japan.
10. Relaxing of O. P. A. controls was very definitely in the minds of voters as they cast their ballots. Nearly a month before the election, polls found, the majority of Americans had arrived at the conclusion that everything except rent should be decontrolled.

ACHIEVES SUCCESS WITH FIRST BOOK

By J. D. HOLDSWORTH
Canadian Press Correspondent

SYDNEY, Australia, Dec. 11 — (CP)— Seventeen-year-old Catherine Gaskin of Sydney has achieved overnight success as an authoress with the publication in Britain of her first novel, "This Other Eden" which has gone into two editions in a few weeks. The publishers have taken an option on Catherine's next two books.

Her first effort runs to about 150,000 words and is set in England and the United States. It tells the adventures of an American girl. There has been some astonishment over the fact that the Australian authoress has never been away from her own country.

Catherine started the book two years ago and left school and gave up her music studies to finish it. Most of her writing was done between 4 a.m. and eight o'clock breakfast. After breakfast she wrote as the mood prompted her.

Unlike her heroine, the Australian girl writer is no sophisticate. Her one ambition is to be a success as a writer and otherwise her interests are reading and orchestral concerts. She has fixed ideas about boys. She finds those of her own age are boring.

She has started work on her second book and has picked its title—"With Every Year". She says its about a boy genius. The setting is Connemara, Ireland from where her parents came. Mr. and Mrs. Gaskin are providing the information about Connemara.
