CONCERNING the very elaborate enlargement of the Hewsom Woodlark Mills at Amherst, particulars of which appeared in the Guardian a few days ago, the management of that enterprising firm has since decided to make their main four-story mill 200 feet long instead of 150. Work is now being pushed forward on the foundation work for this structure. The added space will amount to between 1 and 1 1/2 acres extra, in addition to the already large accommodations provided for by the building which the firm first had in view. The exceptional enterprise thus displayed is most highly commendable.
