RAIDS AND THINGS.

In our sister town of Summerside, a few days ago, according to our news columns, the mighty arm of the law reached successively down into three different places in search of intoxicating liquors. In two of the places "raided" by the Prosecutor and the police; quantities of "American beer, marked lager" were discovered and at the third "a number of empty bottles were found but no liquor."

The "American beer marked lager," the full inwardness of which was unknown to the raiders, but which, they wisely concluded, might contain something harmful to the young and rising generation, will be submitted for analysis. How the empty bottles came to be where they were, or what they had originally contained will remain forever a mystery. Dead men tell no tales, neither do empty bottles.

The "American beer marked lager" was of course suspicious and, as there had been some suspicion that the Prohibition Act was somehow losing its terrors for a few individuals who might not be able to resist the temptation, the raiders did well to keep it safe until they could at least cultivate its acquaintance. This "American beer marked lager" will, it is understood be submitted to a severe analysis and, if found to contain more than the legitimate three per cent of alcohol, will be consigned to the gutter.

We can readily imagine with what feelings of satisfaction the people of Summerside must have heard of this capture; what a sigh of relief must have escaped them when it was found that all that could be discovered of the "hydra headed monster" of old was a few bottles of "American beer marked lager" and a few empty bottles, and that even these, innocent though they might be, were safe under official lock and key.

Of course some unreasonable people will rise up and ask questions about other places in which "American beer" plainly marked "whiskey" is likely to be found if raided. For the suspicion has been very persistent that there are several places in which barrels of it, piles of cases of it, marked and correctly marked "whiskey," "brandy," "gin" and all the other brands known to the trade, could be found without the least trouble, places in which the raiders, following only the direction of their olfactory senses from the street, could be unerringly guided to where there are "loads" of it. Into these places and out of them, so the suspicious ones say, streams of men are to be seen going and coming, at all hours of the day and night, and the odor of the business transacted follows them out into the street.

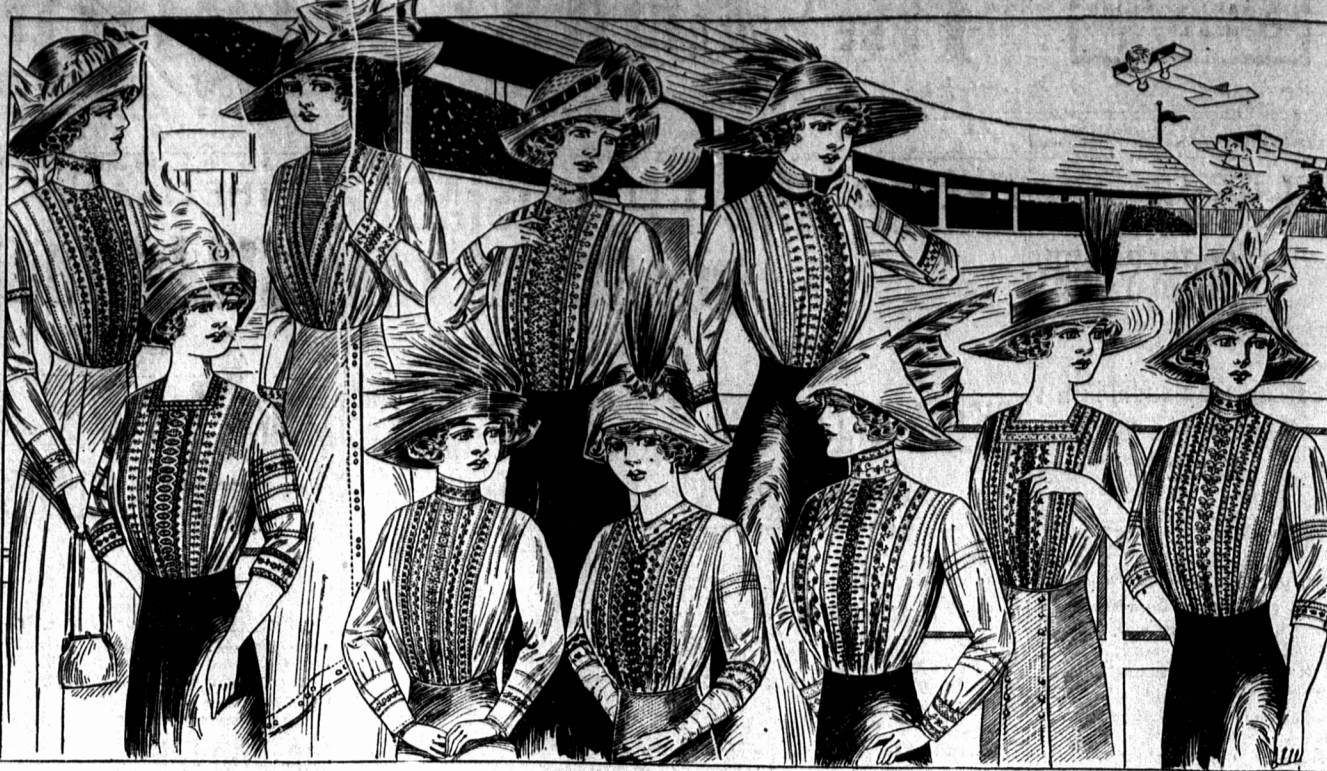

Is it not strange that these suspicions have dodged the prosecutor and that so far no "raid" has been attempted? What is the charm that has shielded these from official suspicion while on the man who "peddles" a bottle of whiskey or the place that harbors "American beer marked lager" the raider descends like a night hawk on a sparrow.

Perhaps this suspicion is unfounded. Perhaps the places in which the "American beer marked lager" and the "empty bottles" are the only ones upon which suspicion should rest, but it is a fact that about nine-tenths of the people of Summerside believe otherwise. In that case, if only to show the injustice of the suspicion, would it not be a good idea, while raids are in order, to just make a little raid on those other suspected places? It would be a great relief to the public to be assured that there was nothing more harmful in these than "American beer marked lager" and a few empty bottles.

SERIO-COMIC.

The situation at Ottawa is not without its ludicrous situations and the cartoonist has found at least some of them. In a Montreal exchange of recent date, "Fit" supplies a few "incidents overlooked by our regular correspondent."

Sir Wilfrid Laurier is seen carrying a bundle of bedding and anxiously questioning his companion, "You are quite sure you aired my sheets, eh, Pugsley." Mr. Pugsley is carrying an armful of pillows. Mr. Borden, carrying a huge pillow is hurrying into the room, uneasily asking, "I wonder if I should have brought another pillow?" Hon. F. D. Monk is pictured with a growing beard and protesting that if he has to stay much longer and his beard keeps on growing he will lose his "fatal fascination in Quebec." An anxious and worried looking Hansard reporter, with notebook in hand, stands by a snoring member trying to master the intricacies of a "bilingual snore." The only intelligible words from the snorer are "The same, thank you." Frank Oliver, showing the effects of the long continued watch, rises sleepily and asks, "Mr. Speaker, before going to sleep I would like to sing the National Anthem. I always do before retiring." It's a habit in our family." The Sergeant-at-Arms is fast asleep. So the humorist sees it.

blockade presents an entirely different aspect. The Liberals have expressed their determination to force dissolution. The Conservatives are determined that the Bill shall go through as read.

Until now the government has not taken the opposition to the bill seriously. They regarded the demands and the challenges for an election as bluff and fireworks. It now looks as if the demands and the challenges were meant and both sides are in a fighting attitude, standing by their arms day and night. At the end of this month the government will be without funds to carry on the business of the country and dissolution and an appeal to the electors will be the only remedy. After dissolution the government can put itself in possession of temporary funds by issuing Governor General's warrants.

This is the outcome now looked forward to. The leaders on both sides are expecting a general election. Whatever differences of opinion there may be throughout the country with respect to the relative merits of the two naval policies it is doubtful if the prospect of an election will be received very favorably either by Liberals or Conservatives. It is, to begin with, irregular. Redistribution should come before the general election. Another general election must follow almost immediately upon redistribution, and general elections, out of their normal courses are, for many reasons, undesirable. This week will probably make a change in the situation and the appeal to the people may be averted. It is extremely doubtful that the Liberal party would benefit by a premature appeal and it is certain that such an appeal, at this juncture, would fail to weld Canadian opinion into unanimity on either of the policies now before parliament.

NOTES.

"Of recent colonial imports," says a London, England, exchange, "the Canadian one-hour banquet likes us best. Earl Grey, who is nothing if not an organizer and a master-mind, presided at the Royal Colonial Institute in honor of New Zealand's Minister of Defence, and put the whole thing through, toasts and speeches, Antarctic tributes and all, in one hour by his watch. Earl Grey may pride himself on a brilliant innovation." If Earl Grey imported the one-hour banquet from Canada he must have taken the last sample of that variety. The kind in vogue here at present continues throughout the night.
