BACK IN THE SALIENT—THE ATTACK ON MOUNT SORRELL, SUMMER 1916
Easter Day, 1916, fell on the 23rd of April, and a great many interesting facts were connected with the day. It is also the anniversary of Shakespeare's birth and his death, and also of the 2nd battle of Ypres. The day was a glorious one. The air was sweet and fresh, the grass was the brightest green, hedge rows and trees were in leaf, and everybody was in high spirits. After services in St. George's Church at Hograaf, I rode over to Poperinghe and attended a memorial service which the 1st Brigade were holding in the Cinema. General Mercer, who was killed not long after the attack on the salient, was present. The building was crowded with men, and the service was very solemn.

Life at this time was very pleasant, except for the fact that we never knew what might happen any day, and everybody was in high spirits. After services in St. George's Church at Hograaf, I rode over to Poperinghe and attended a memorial service which the 1st Brigade were holding in the Cinema. General Mercer, who was killed not long after the attack on the salient, was present. The building was crowded with men, and the service was very solemn.

ROAD OF REMEMBRANCE—There is general approval, says the Presbyterian Witness, of the plans which the Montreal Women's Club have in view to make a thoroughfare to be known as the "Road of Remembrance" along which will be placed some five hundred trees, each tree to be a memorial to one who was killed in the war, the name to be inscribed on a brass tablet affixed to the tree. This lovely idea could be very readily carried out in the Garden Province where our tree did so much to the beauty of our land.
