

No more WORRYING

YOU don't have to wonder whether children will eat Kellogg's Rice Krispies. As soon as they hear those toasted rice bubbles crackle in milk or cream they always "pitch in" and eat.

So nourishing and easy to digest. Fine for the evening meal. Made by Kellogg in London, Ontario.

Frigidaire Latest Electrical Convenience:

A new household electric refrigerator that uses no more current than one ordinary electric light bulb is now on display at Frigidaire show-rooms throughout Canada according to an announcement by W. G. Wright, manager of the Canadian Frigidaire factory.

In addition to being unusually low in operating costs, this new Frigidaire sets other standards of economy as well as convenience and beauty. It is the lowest priced Frigidaire ever offered.

"It is a known fact," said Mr. Wright, "that many so-called low-priced electric refrigerators have not been economical from an operating standpoint. The new Frigidaire, however, is to be sold at a really low price yet provides extraordinarily low operating cost. It does this by the use of a motor half the size of any ever before used in household electric refrigerators, yet one which provides completely adequate refrigeration capacity."

The new Frigidaire is finished in white and is easily cleaned, according to the announcement. It has a number of new features such as automatic defrosting, automatic ice tray removal, unusually light weight and a food storage compartment with exceptionally large capacity in proportion to the outside dimensions of the cabinet. Special space has been provided for tall containers and the beauty of the cabinets has been enhanced by handsome new chromium hardware.

My Best Girl

By KATHLEEN NORRIS

Her mother said that it didn't seem to her to make sense. Elizabeth read it once, suspiciously, and then forgot all about it. But Len and Maggie discussed it more than once, in some bewilderment. Len said frankly that he didn't "get it."

There was no hot water, and nobody in the world could wash the plates after a lamb stew dinner in cold. She piled them and scraped them while she waited for some water to boil.

"Maggie!" This was her mother, from bed. "Liz go out?"

"Ten minutes ago, Ma."

"Well, here's all there is to it," said Mrs. Johnson. "I'm at the end of my green, and I can't do no more leaves until I get some. I guess you're tired, ain't you?"

"Not so very."

"You'll have to get the money from your father, Maggie!"

"Pop, have you thirty cents?"

"I guess so." He counted it out—dimes, pennies.

"Will two be enough, Ma?"

"How much did your father give you? Thirty cents—yes, that'll be enough, but I would like to know what Len Johnson does with his money! Shut that door!"

Dishes waiting, kettle so slow to heat, crumbs on the floor, batter spilled and dried on the stove, the red tablecloth ruffled, the sugar bowl upset, dish towels stiff with grease and water—no matter, the inspiration of it went before her like a banner, as she ran down the dark street.

"The way to begin living the ideal life is—to begin."

"Joe," Maggie asked, a day or two later, "how could you live the ideal life if nothing in your life was ideal?"

"Ah, there's the catch!" Joe answered airily.

"The meaning of that ideal life thing, is this: You're—you're all in your own mind, do you see? What you have doesn't matter. What you think and what you are is everything—and what bunk it all is!"

She added sneeringly to himself. "Do you get me?" he asked aloud.

She did not get him at all, but she nodded.

"You must make everything beautiful in your life," Joe said, encouraged by her attention. "An old plate, for instance, an old stain on the wall, why, Maggie, the museums of Europe are full of them—old plates and ragged clothes and worn-out rugs and water stains, and everyone thinks they're beautiful! The ceiling of the Sistine Chapel, for instance. Did you ever hear of that?"

"Michelangelo did it," Maggie said, nodding.

"And how did you know that?"

"Oh, we had it in school, an' then we have 'em here, among the finest—cent classic coloured reproductions," Maggie replied.

"Well, all those old pictures are dirty and worn, mouldering away—all the old palaces are, lots of the books, all the furniture—and yet persons swarm over there every year and admire them," said Joe.

"Now, the point is, suppose you had to live with a lot of rotting furniture, and chipped plates, and you just said to yourself: 'These are beautiful and valuable relics—'"

"You mean that cups an' chairs an' being poor an' tired really have nothin' to do with the way you live?" she asked, coming nearer to it than he had, as he recognized somewhat to his surprise.

"You've got it," he said.

There was vision in her uplifted eyes, as if the walls of the mattress factory, where they were sitting, had faded away, and new dreams of beauty and fitness and purity had risen before her inner sight.

"Joe, nothing could stop that if you once got it!" she said in a whisper. And then, half to herself, "I can't wait to get home and begin!" And after a while she said wistfully: "Joe, I wish I knew as much as you know."

CHAPTER V.

"A lot of it's bluff," he said carelessly. But he liked her blind admiration, nevertheless.

"Dour your mother work?" she asked him one day.

"My—?" He started, considered.

"Not now," he said. "She split a Board the other day," he said, after thought.

There was a familiar ring about these facts; could she possibly be speaking of her employer and of his father?

"What on earth are you talking about?" he asked blankly.

"Merrill," she answered readily. "Mackenzie was the brains, they say—he was the 'Mack'—but he's dead. But Merrill is the soul of honour, and he not only has the faculty of drawin' good men about him, but he has made a small fortune out of the Mack, took care of most of her family, an' has kept several of her relatives out of jail for what they done profiteering in wartime as well!"

Joe was staring at her, oddly, a slow smile spreading on his face.

"Who taught you that piece?"

"Ev'ryone knows that."

"Is—that—so?" He grinned. Relatives of his mother kept out of jail, eh? That was probably Uncle Irving and young Irv.

He looked at her, musing in his turn.

"I'd like to walk Maggie in on the old man some day—or better yet, walk him into the store and introduce Maggie as the fine, independent girl he's always talking about."

Joe reflected. "I'd say, 'You keep suggesting that I get out somewhere and meet a real girl—well, she's real, Maggie. And she's going to step right off the floor of the Mack into the position of your only daughter-in-law!'"

"I might bluff it, anyway," his thoughts ran on. "Maggie's such a little sport, she'd enjoy playing the part. She'd make up for it and carry it off like a comedienne!"

But he couldn't play any games with Maggie. The poor kid was falling in love with him fast enough as it was.

"It's probably her first crush," Joe thought, watching her not without a sort of generous pity. "She'll have it bad. But it won't hurt her, it never hurts anyone."

She was far enough from any appreciation now, at all events, as she chattered on of everything she found interesting, sometimes making him laugh, sometimes—oddly—giving him a prick behind the eyes that owed itself to a very different sensation. Maggie had never thought of love, for herself.

Her own affairs, indeed, were entirely secondary.

But she betrayed herself to Joe with almost every word and glance.

"I'll tell you what, Joe, I like you better than anyone else except my own family!"

"Don't like me as well as your sister, huh?"

"Well, I like some things about you as well as I like anything about Liz," she might finally decide.

The little figure drooped against a length of drab-painted brick wall, the small, hard-worn hands were clasped in one of her rare moments of idleness, and her absent staring eyes wore an unusual expression of sorrow and doubt. Joe's heart pricked him.

"I hope you're not beginning something that you can't finish, Maggie!" he said to himself more than once.

One day he brought her a long envelope, which, upon opening it in an expectant flutter, Maggie found full of printed "G's," large and small, cut from magazines and newspapers.

"Oh, Joe, it's awful cute the way you learn me!" she said, her betraying eyes luminous, her whole being melting toward him visibly, irresistibly. And she presently reported that her mother and sister had made dry, halfcontemptuous reference to the fact that she did not drop the ubiquitous final consonant any more.

She told him that he had brought her all her luck.

"It was the day you first"—she paused—"first came," she resumed briskly, deciding upon her verb, "that I got on to the ideal idea. And then 'member that you gave me one that night, going home? Well, I put it up by the clock, and we—well, just about live in that card. It's made a difference in me, an' in everything."

"I see a difference in you," he said seriously.

"Oh, Joe, honest—do you?"

"Honest, I do."

"How?"
