PAARDEBERG MEMORIAL SERVICE HELD

were donated by Mrs. V. L. Goodwill, in memory of her late husband, Lt.-Col. V. L. Goodwill, M. D., C. A. M. C., Commander of the 26th Field Ambulance Corps.

A summary of the context of Dr. Legate's sermon which was based on the text in Isaiah 50:45, "Let us stand together," is as follows:

The errand that has guided our feet to the house of God today is that we may hallow the memory of an event which has become noteworthy in our Island annals. Anything that touches the common national life should be regarded as being within the scope of religion. And there is no better place than the sanctuary in which to determine the significance and value of a matter. To let the divine light fall upon it, to weigh it in the scales of God, to apply to it judgments higher than our own—that is the best way to estimate the truth about a thing. And so we have assembled here bearing in the arms of our faith the memory of a distinguished patriotic service, in order that it may be the more sanctified to us, and that it may gain in preciousness because of the place to which we have brought it.

One of the most admirable features of the recurring celebration of Paardeberg Day is that you South African veterans accord in it a place to God, and treat it not merely as a secular but as a sacred observance.

When I was considering the question of how I should address you, I happened to read this fiftieth chapter of Isaiah, and when, in the eighth verse, I came upon the words, "Let us stand together," I knew I had found my text. And although, for my purpose, I have to break the preachers' honored rule and sever the words from their original context, yet this can be well enough forgiven, inasmuch as the words, standing by themselves, so fitly and completely cover the thought which I desire to make prominent.

The story which gives rise to this annual memorial service is well known to many of you, but on this occasion it deserves to be repeated. Just over thirty-six years ago the British nation was called upon to face a crisis which involved the solidarity of the Empire. At the beginning of the present century a wave of Imperialistic feeling had begun to sweep across the far-flung territories of the British Empire, and it was the South African war that brought it to completeness, and that gave the final touch to the Empire spirit as we know it today. Wherever the Union Jack flew the sentiment became the sentiment of our text, "Let us stand together."

The South African campaign was fought, in the first place, to preserve and conserve the liberties of British subjects in that distant land, in the second place, to hold vast regions for the Empire as a whole, and, in the third place, to assert and vindicate the integrity of British soil against invasion. This all made a strong appeal to the people of Canada, and the more because the great sister commonwealth of Australia, with great enthusiasm, had determined to despatch a contingent to assist the Motherland in her hour of need. And so, on the thirtieth day of October in the year 1899, the first expeditionary force of loyal Canadians made history by leaving home and kindred, and sailed away to the other side of the world in obedience to the outward and inward call of "Let us stand together." Amongst those who volunteered for the service of Queen and country were sixty of our Island's sons, and those of that dutiful company who have survived the ravages of time and circumstance we are proud to have with us as fellow-worshippers today. The supreme sacrifice was made by two, to whose memory wreaths are being placed this morning, Roland Taylor and Alfred Riggs; and others suffered wounds in the ten days battle of Paardeberg which counted so largely in the winning and the ending of the war.

The part played by our own men will never lose its lustre, for when they said "Let us stand together," they set the virtue of patriotic service upon a high pedestal. And that is what constitutes our right to bring this whole affair into the house of God today. For patriotism is one of the highest and noblest of the Christian virtues; and, as history tells, all down the centuries, long before the Christian church was born, patriotism has always been closely linked with man's conception of religious duty. The great souls of every period and of every land have been great patriots. And when men say, "Let us stand together for our altars and our firesides," that passionate emotion is born of the religious instinct, and is striking its roots in the finest and best part of human nature. Let us be clear as to what we are now doing. We are not glorifying war. We are not blustering and swaggering, and recalling with conceit and vanity the mere military prowess of the men who fought our battles. We are in no mood for that kind of thing.

In spite of the actual fighting that is taking place at the present time, and the sabre-rattling in which certain nations are indulging, the world is hungering and thirsting for peace. And there are no stronger advocates of peace than these returned soldiers whom I am now especially addressing. There is no man better qualified to express an opinion on war than the man who has borne the tortures of it in his mind, the horrors of it in his heart, and its buffeting in his body. He knows that "war is hell." He knows better than anybody else that war settles nothing but unsettles everything. We do not, because we dare not, glorify war in the house of God. But what we are doing is, we are thanking God for the courage and faithfulness of those who did what they believed to be their duty at a crisis, and did it at a cost; men who said "Let us stand together through thick and thin that right may be vindicated and justice be done." Our religion not only permits, but demands such a spirit. And that is why we bring this affair within the precincts of God's house today. May the day never dawn that will find us slack in the way of duty, though the doing of it may mean self-denial and sacrifice! May the day never fall that will find us losing our inborn sense of a high and holy patriotism! For in whatever other things a people may be rich, if it be poor in those two virtues, it is poor indeed.

And what we need above all, especially in these unsettled times, is to have our patriotism christianized. The very keynote of the religion of Jesus Christ is peace. The song that proclaimed His birth was "Peace on earth, goodwill toward men." The prayer He prayed before His departure was, "My peace I leave with you."

Christian patriotism would hasten peace. Our leagues and conferences and pacts have not yet brought us peace: our longings and our prayers have not brought us peace. Peace will not, cannot come, until there is born in the heart of mankind an impulse that will say "Let us stand together in the spirit of our Lord and Master, the peace of God ruling in our hearts!" The nearer the world gets to the Cross of Jesus Christ, the nearer it gets to permanent peace. You will sometimes hear the question asked: How is it that after almost two thousand years of the Christian religion, a religion which claims to be a peace religion, we are as far off from world peace as ever? The answer is simply this, because so much of our religion is only skin-deep. When the Gospel of Jesus Christ gets a fair chance peace among the nations will become possible. When men yield in truth their hearts and lives to Him, peace will be assured. Do I not interpret rightly the inward wish of every heart that listens to my words "Let us stand together for a peace like that?" There is no other way to peace.

And in conclusion, there is one further application of our text which I cannot refrain form mentioning. Shortly after the Great War there were certain cynical persons who averred that the celebration of Armistice Day would be done with and forgotten in a few years time. The lie has been given to that. The two minutes silence has gained in impressiveness with the passing of the years.

The heart of the world is too sound to consign to oblivion the sacrifice and the service thus commemorated. But you South African veterans have in your annual celebration, outstripped even that record. For thirty-six long years you have taken as your watchword "Let us stand together," and as your comrades have left you one by one, you have displayed such a fine spirit of true comradeship amongst those who remain that public sentiment is touched by it, and public admiration continues to be accorded to it, and Paardeberg Day continues to be a red-letter day in the Island's calendar. Long may your comradeship continue unbrokenly, and, while it does, may God's blessing rest upon you, and your password keep unchanged, "Let us stand together."

Machado May Return To Cuba

(A. P. By Guardian's Special Wire)

NEW YORK, Feb. 23—Gerardo Machado, one-time dictator of Cuba, is edging closer to his homeland after nearly three years of jumps ahead of extradition papers.

He appeared suddenly in Bermuda a few days ago, and announced he was headed for Nassau, the Bahamas, whence he began his long flight from personal vengeance in 1933.

Machado's return to the western world after a series of hasty secretive flights that landed him in Canada, the United States, the Dominican Republic, Germany, Switzerland and France, is officially explained by the statement that he is ill and needs to be in a "warm country."

But in New York, Dr. Orestes Ferrara, former Cuban secretary of state under Machado and now an exile, said this:

"Mark my words, that man some day will return to importance in Cuban life and politics."

It was to Nassau, only a few miles from Cuba, that Machado fled after the Cuban revolution of 1933.

THREE KILLED IN SNOWSLIDE

Fears Held Death Toll May Be Greater.

(A. P. by Guardian's Special Wire)

SEATTLE, Feb. 23—The Snoqualmie Pass snow slide, which killed at least three men, was dug into today by workers to ascertain if more persons remained trapped. Three bodies were recovered.

Menacing snow fields of the Cascade Mountains, 66 miles west of here, hung above the workmen as they toiled with snow ploughs and shovels from opposite ends of the barrier, spread over half a mile of road. Several automobiles and trucks were uncovered, all unoccupied.

The digging continued because, the coroner felt by no means certain the casualty list of three dead and one injured represented the total.

Recurring slides last night retarded the crew's progress. In the darkness, they were fearful heir own digging might start another avalanche.

About 100 winter sport followers were marooned at the Cascade summit because of slides.

SCOTLAND YARD

agents found "five minute bridegrooms"—picked up along the dock, on the Thames embankment, or in cheap hotels—who would go through the marriage ceremony at a register office, giving their names and British citizenship to the new arrivals at a price ranging from $25 to $75 a head.

Down and Out

Invariably, the police found the men were down and out—only too glad at the sudden windfall of cash in hand and a new suit of clothes, given them to go through the ceremony and ask no questions.

The "husband," of course, never meets his newly-wed "wife" again.

Scotland Yard found that at least 30 men, mostly foreigners, were conducting a big-scale "business' in and around London with profits running into well over $5,000,000 annually.

Departs Hastily

One was discovered to have deposited more than $25,000 in a bank in three weeks. Although lacking concrete evidence, police "suggested" that the man, a foreigner, should leave. He departed hastily.

Now Scotland Yard is examining registrars' records of marriages for several years past in an attempt to ferret out "bogus" marriages linked with the illicit traffic.

They are handicapped, however, by the fact that numerous "marriages of convenience" have taken place in recent years—chiefly between British subjects and refugees from Germany and other continental countries seeking sanctuary in Great Britain.

HARRY CURTIS REAPPOINTED

BRENTFORD, England—(C. P.)—Manager of Brentford Football Club in the English League for the past 10 years, Harry C. Curtis has signed an agreement to stay with the team for another five years.

Famous Clubs Fight To Hold Proud Records

LONDON, Feb. 23.—In 1888 Aston Villa and Blackburn Rovers, who have since became famous in the world of soccer, were among the clups who formed the English Football League. Today the teams, alone of the original 12 to have remained constantly in the first division, are in danger of having their proud colors lowered.

Wherever soccer is played there is dismay at the position of these great clubs. With less than three months of the season remaining, they are bracketed in last place and seem doomed to relegation to the second division next season.

Aston Villa, most colorful of the pair, has been struggling to emerge from its slump for months and the money chests of this Birimngham team have been depleted to the extent of approximately $200,000 in an effort to put a winning eleven in the field. But the efforts have failed and the star-studded side continues to give only mediocre displays.

On the other hand the Blackburn squad, after starting the season in good form, began to slip in November and since the turn of the year its decline has been rapid. Blackburn's directors have nothing like the big financial resources of the Villa to enter the transfer market and the Lancashire club's fate seems inevitable.

Few people can remember the sum total of the Villan's national triumphs. They have been league champions six tims—five times in seven seasons back in the 90s. In 1897 they won both the English Cup and the League championship — a double feat equalled only once, by Preston North End. Moreover that year they won the championship by the record margin of 11 points. Blackburn's league career has not been so outstanding as the Lancastrians have been champions on only two occasions. Always, however, they have been regarded among the most powerful outfits in the league.

In English Cup play, the careers of Aston Villa and the Rovers shine more brightly than any other clubs in the league. The teams share the honor of each having won the trophy six times and they have each fought 13 times in the semi-final round.

The amount of money expended by Aston Villa this evening on new players constitutes a record. In November and December, six players, all of international calibre, were added to the Birmingham team's roster. George Cummirgs, great international back of Patrick Thistle, and Alex. Massie, Heart of Midlothian halfback, even more famous in the ranks of representative teams north of the border, came from Scotland, Tom Griffiths, another middle line player, mainstay of the defence on Welsh international teams, was transferred from Middlesbrough. The sextet was completed with J. Palethorpe, Sheffield Wednesday, J. J. Williams, Huddersfield Town and G. Hodgson, a South African from the Liverpool club.

Of these players Palethorpe was operated on for appendicitis recently and is not likely to play again this season while Griffiths has missed several matches through injury.

While the position of the two clubs is precarious it is possible they may yet get out of the danger zone. In the first season after the War the Villans made a very poor start. On Nov. 2 that year they were in second last place with seven points from 12 matches. It was at this time that they signed Frank Barson from Barnsley and then they finished ninth and won the English Cup.

Orioles And Bruins Play Scoreless Tie

Bridgetown rink opened for skating and hockey Saturday night, Jan. 18. This season it is under the capable management of Frank Clay and Warren MacDonald. The surrounding districts have engaged in several games of hockey but the most interesting game up to this time was played Saturday night, Feb. 15 when the Bridgetown Orioles and Strathcona Bruins played a scoreless tie.

Spindle, in the Strathcona net, although only a beginner, played airtight hockey. In the Bridgetown nets Matheson, a more experienced goalie than his opponent, also played good hockey.

The teams were very evenly matched and from the face-off hit up a fast pace which continued throughout three periods. The overtime was not so fast owing to heavy going and lack of breath.

The game was very clean with only a few penalties handed out by the referee. Sometimes tempers flared up but in each case combatants were at once given a chance to cool off on the sidelines.

Following is the lineup:

Strathcona Bruins; Goal, Winfield Spindle; defence, Everett MacLeod, Esdale Burdett; forwards, Wilfred Judson, Norman McLeod, Ralph Burdett; sub, John MacLeod.

Bridgetown Orioles: Goal, Revel Matheson; defence, Raymond MacDonald, Dan McMaster; forwards, Dale, Judson, Elliott, Currie, O'Leary, Morris.

Referee: Lorne Wigginton.
