A FABLE IN SLANG.

Story of the Poetical Maiden who was Peevish About Matrimony.

BY M. A. N. H.

Once Upon a Time there was a Maiden living in the Meadows who Suffered from the Intellectual Temperament.

There are just two classes in the Feminine Free-for-All—the Intellectual Girl with the High Brow who wears Glasses and reads Marie Corelli; and the Physical Girl, with a Fine Figure and Freckles who likes to Drive the Horses for Father and never Misses a Prayer Meeting night.

Our Heroine had the Mentals for fair. Her Parents, it is Absurdly Unnecessary to say, were Respectable but Poor and every Sixty Seconds there was Something Doin around the Kitchen had Lucile wanted to give her Old Mother the Muscular Hand.

But Lucile wasn't entered for the Pots and Pans Handicap. After the Second and Last call for Dinner in the Dining Car you would find Lucile in the Parlor with Tennyson, or struggling with one of Mrs. Wilcox's Poem of Passion. Lucile didn't like the Surroundings one bit. She longed for the day when she could Fly away from her Rude Environment and find some Congenial Spirit whose Soul might Attune with hers to Search into the Whyness of the Wherefore and the Whiciness of the What.

She did Verses like most Intellectual Girls. Her Soul-Yearnings overflowed in the Pumpkins Centre Banner every Saturday evening in something like this:— I wander the Meadows Brown and Sere, The Day steals to Sleep behind the Hill;

The Primrose nods to the Asphodel The great grey Sea lies damp and still, Come Spirit of Mine, My Affinity, Come from the Star-Drift, Come from the Sea;— Any old place will do—but come, You're late for dinner but you'll stay to tea!

Other Saturday evenings like this:— Is it, or is it not, Or why should it be? Is this Chaos and the Dark We, bat-like, grope in, In grave unrest, In paleozoic fear Unknowing, knowledgeable? Why is it, or, Which is it? I give it up—Nit!

The neighbors read it and said "My, but what a Head that Girl of Si's has got."

As for the Editor he near went Dotty, but what could the Poor Boy do? You can't Turn Down an Esteemed Correspondent.

As regards Matrimony Lucile, wouldn't have Touched any of the Villagers with a Fishing Pole. She Spoke to very Few. She was Waiting for the Affinity, who would be Good and Grand and Noble just like Manfred or Don Juan or R. P. Hobson.

After waiting in the Meadows till she'd done the Thirty-Eighth Lap, Lucile hitched on with Ex Brown who ran the Meat Waggon for Pumpkin Centre.
