The Song of Bernadette

On February 11th, 1858, two school girls were sent by their poverty-stricken mother to gather some fire-wood. A third companion joined them, merely for the adventure. Their names were, Bernadette and Marie Soubirous and Jeanne Auduc. Bernadette was slow and timid and delicate. Her companions, joshing and scolding her, left Bernadette near a dark and forbidding grotto. She was about to follow her companions, when unusual musical sounds drifted to her ears. She was afraid. It was very dark and gloomy. She decided to go home. Suddenly, in casting her fearful eyes towards the grotto, she saw a most beautiful Lady. The Lady smiled at her—beckoned to her—prayed with her. Bernadette's companions returning, the Lady disappeared. In her childlike simplicity, Bernadette shared her remarkable experience with her two companions. They laughed at her. In her parents' home, mother and father were indignant at her. The neighbours pelted and wondered. Her Pastor frowned on her. Her teachers misunderstood her. The Mayor and the Police were bent on placing her in a lunatic asylum. And so the life drama of a little child, Lourdes, France, will be reverently, realistically and inspiringly unfolded for us, on the stage, at Holy Redeemer, Hall Upper Street, Charlottetown, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, at half-past eight. The Redemptionist Fathers will present "The Song of Bernadette," in three acts and ten scenes, through the Liguorian Players. This drama is a "must see" play for the holy Lent. It is not a moving picture. It is an acted drama on the stage.

THE EDUCATIONAL HORIZON — A SATURDAY FEATURE — PRESENTING NEWS AND VIEWS OF INTEREST TO TEACHERS AND ALL OTHERS SEEKING IMPROVEMENT IN EDUCATION

WITH THE C. T. F. by A. S. WILLIAMS

DEDUCTION OF FEES FROM INCOME TAX

I have been in communication with the Manitoba General Secretary with regard to deduction of fees from income when computing income tax. Manitoba is in a similar position to P. E. I., as regards their act of incorporation. They have a write-out clause such as ours. Following the General Secretary's reply, I immediately wrote to the Deputy Minister of Taxation at Ottawa, asking for his ruling on the matter. As yet, I have had no reply. However, in a recent letter from our C. T. F. Secretary, we have been offered the assistance of the Canadian Teachers' Federation in securing a favorable ruling for such deduction. Should we find it necessary, we shall certainly pass the matter over to Dr. Crutchfield to deal with, as he is an Ottawa resident and can make a closer approach. Those teachers wishing to make out their income tax forms would be well advised to deduct the amount of fees, as many of us did last year. We do not deduct, however, that we shall do so this year with more hope.

NEWS LETTER FROM THE C.T.F.

In his news letter for February, Dr. Crutchfield gives considerable space to the discussion of what recently concluded in Paris, France. I shall give a full account of this important matter in our next issue of the Horizon.

Mr. John L. Langland, an eminent educationist of Great Britain will make a tour of Canada, arriving in this country on about March 8th. I have no information re this matter yet, but presume that the British visitor will come to our province while in Canada.

As pointed out in a recent letter to all members of the C. T. F. during the week of August 11th, the general sessions are open to the public, and it is to be hoped that not a few of our Island teachers and parents will take advantage of the opportunity of attending some of these meetings. The C. T. F. General Secretary sends a very cordial invitation to all who should wish to attend. Matters of vital importance to all teachers will be discussed at these meetings, such as: The establishment of a central office in Ottawa for the C. T. F. The inauguration of a campaign for a new "Ministerial Building" for the teachers who served in the last war and for the establishment of an educational foundation which will enable the C. T. F. to adopt a more militant and active attitude in the future. The public for the sake of the children, our educational system must be improved.

The engagement of none but properly qualified teachers. Teacher shortage.

PRUNING

The object of pruning is greater cash return from the orchard. This may be attempted first by decreasing the costs and second by increasing the amount of good fruit. Decreasing the costs. Establishing an orchard requires a heavy financial investment. The interest therein is an important cost item of growing apples. Therefore, the sooner the orchard starts bearing and the longer it stays in production, the more quickly the investment is returned on the orchard depends on the life of the individual trees. Long lived trees must have mechanically strong trunks and branches, which are obtained by directing and training the young trees during early development. Costs may also be reduced by pruning the trees so that orchard operations such as mowing, spraying, and harvesting are more easily accomplished.

Increasing the amount and quality of fruit. The amount of fruit produced in the orchard is proportional to the general vigor of the trees. Vigor is dependent on good soil and fertility and has been discussed under orchard soils. Moreover, heavy production is limited to structurally strong trees capable of supporting large crops and shaped to get a maximum distribution of vigorous fruiting wood over the entire tree so that all available space is used to best advantage.

The quality of fruit, depending largely on size and color of the apple, is largely determined by the amount of functional leaf area per fruit. Good vigorous limbs carry more leaves per fruit than weak limbs but through openings in their sides. Their blood is colorless. They have nerves and can feel joy and pain the same as other living creatures. Their muscles are on the inside, their skeletons on the outside, of their bodies. This skeleton is formed of a substance called chitin. It is much harder and thicker in some insects than in others. After insects reach the adult stage they do not grow any larger. Their growth takes place during their larval stages. There are usually four stages in the life of an insect: viz., the egg, the larva, the pupa and the adult. In some orders there are only three stages, viz.: the egg, the nymph, and the adult or imago. During the growing stage of an insect's life it undergoes a number of moults; a new soft skin is formed under the old hard one, which is cast aside.

Some insects live lonely individual lives. Others live and work together in communities and are referred to as social in habit. Insects may be either beneficial to man or very harmful. They may benefit man by (1) destroying injurious insects, (2) pollinating flowers, (3) providing him with some useful commodity, such as honey. They harm man by (1) destroying food and other crops, (2) destroying forest trees and timber, (3) doing damage to stored foods, clothing, (4) carrying or communicating disease and (5) inflicting painful bites.

Insects form a class of the animal kingdom, just as mammals or birds form a class. The importance of insects will be realized when we learn that there are over three times as many described species of insects in the world as of all other animals combined.

HOW TO FIND MEANINGS

To find meanings with any degree of satisfaction there are several bits of information that you need. It is not enough to be able to look up the meaning of each word in a list. What is important is to know what a certain word means when used in a particular sentence. To define a word so that it will be understood is a difficult task. Hence, in addition to definitions, dictionary makers use other devices to help us understand the

SUBJUNCTIVE MOOD

Learn to distinguish between the subjunctive and the indicative moods, especially for the verb be. (a) Use the subjunctive mood to express a wish, a regret, a command. (b) In formal discourse use the subjunctive mood to express a condition that is strongly improbable or contrary to fact. (c) Make the sequence of tenses logically consistent. Observe the sequence of tenses by making a verb in a subordinate clause conform to the tense used in the main clause.

COOKING VEGETABLES

Three methods are commonly used: 1. Boiling; 2. Steaming; 3. Baking. Boiling: 1. Use as little water as possible "Cover with water and boil until tender" is no longer considered a sufficient instruction. 2. Minerals are easily dissolved into the water in which the vegetable is cooked and the longer time required the more minerals will be dissolved. Therefore, use boiling water and keep boiling constantly. 3. Vitamins are injured by heat and oxidation. The closely covered saucepan, therefore, assists in preventing this loss. 4. Salt added to coloured vegetables while cooking preserves colour and accentuates flavour. The secret of life is not to do what you like, but to like what you do.

EXERCISE IN GRAMMAR

Write a sentence to illustrate each of the following rules: At the end of every statement place a period. At the end of every command or entreaty place a period. At the end of every question place a question mark. At the end of every exclamation place an exclamation mark. Begin every sentence with a capital letter. Use a comma to separate two or more words or groups of words used in a series. Use a comma or two commas to set off the name of the person addressed.

INDO-CHINA

France, like other colonial powers is having serious trouble with her possessions. The crisis in Indo-China is the most conspicuous example of her difficulties. That land, in southeastern Asia, larger than France itself, has been under French control for about half a century. The people have been long dissatisfied with French rule, and unrest increased as a result of the recent war.

On the day after Japan's surrender, the people of northern Indo-China announced the establishment of an independent republic called Viet Nam. After several months of wrangling and negotiation, the French recognized Viet Nam as a "Free State," but not as a completely independent nation. Just how far they are willing to go is still uncertain, but they make it clear that these people, who make up four-fifths of Indo-China's population may have a great deal

COMPLEMENT

The following are the various forms in which a complement can be expressed. A Transitive verb requiring a complement is called Factive, while an Intransitive verb requiring a Complement is called Copulative. (1) Noun: The citizens made him their King. That beggar turned out thief. (2) Possessive: She made John's quarrel her own. This book is mine, not James'. (3) Adjective: The judge set

NEW ZEALAND

Centuries passed over the Maori's head in these remote islands, and the world knew him not. The navigators who first blazed into the Pacific sailed far to the north of his home. The first European to break through this isolation was Abel Tasman, a Dutch captain in the service of the Dutch East India Company, who in 1642, sailing east after his discovery of Tasmania, sighted the Alps in the southern Island. Tasman lifted only a corner of the veil. Coasting north he turned towards what is Cook Strait and anchored in Golden Bay, where the Maoris killed four of his men. Eventually, baffled by easterly and southerly winds, he gave up the idea of sailing to the east and went north. Attempting to land on the Three Kings, the group of little islands off the north of the North Island, he thought the risk too great, so he sailed away without taking any more trouble to put new land accurately on the map. He named it Staten Land, and afterwards it was renamed New Zealand, after the province of that name in Tasmania's country. In 1769 Captain James Cook landed near what is now Gisborne. Cook, who visited New Zealand several times, sailed round the islands, mapped the coast with remarkable accuracy for Britain. He had much trouble with the Maoris, whose courage against the gunpowder and iron of the newcomers was as great as their curiosity.

On Christmas Day, 1814 Samuel Marsden, of the Church of Scotland, preached the first sermon in New Zealand. He was a pioneer of a band of men—Anglican Roman Catholics and Wesleyans—who in a generation or so spread Christianity through most of New Zealand. George Augustus Selwyn was the first Church of England Bishop in New Zealand, who laboured in the colony from 1842 to 1868.
