The Girl Who Had No Chance

By MARION RUBINCAM

TIM Chapter 26

Myra imitated the elaborate bath that allowed rejuvenated Emily, and emerged feeling much better. She found Emily's rose color gown on her bed when she was through. She dressed quickly, glancing at the fact that her golden hair waved of itself and that the steamy air of the bathroom had only made it wavy. She pulled it high on her head, too, having studied Emily's method, and put on the rose gown. All her lingerie was too high for any of these city gowns, so she slipped her little garments below her arms, hating her pretty white shoulders.

The gown was much too low in front, and practically useless. She looked back but Myra liked that. She admired the firm contour of her arms and the plastic lines of her shoulders. Back she was much prettier than Emily, really, she knew. Though she had the same manner, the self assurance, of her cousin. She gave one shoulder a little lift. Emily did that—it was extraordinarily becoming.

Tim joined them after dinner, as did Gabrielle Carter, a bright brunette, daughter of an Italian mother and a Spanish father, a woman who had drifted into the city from some unknown place, who managed, somehow, to maintain an apartment, a maid, a good name, all at the same time. "A feat," Cousin Emily remarked, "only Gabrielle could perform so beautifully to be thought respectable abroad and go well dressed in this town."

All of which Myra did not understand.

Ouch! Rub Backache, Stiffness, Lumbago

Back hurts you? Can't straighten up without sudden pain, sharp aches and twinges? Now listen! That's lumbago, sciatica, or maybe from a strain, and you'll get relief from the moment you rub your back with soothing, penetrating St. Jacobs Oil. Nothing else takes out soreness, lameness and stiffness so quickly. You simply rub it on your back, and out comes the pain. It is harmless, and doesn't burn the skin.

Limbber up! Don't suffer! Get a small trial bottle of old, honest St. Jacobs Oil from any drug store and apply it just once you'll get relief. You'll never have backache, lumbago or sciatica, because your back will never hurt, or cause any more misery. It never disappoints, and has been recommended for 60 years.

stand. But she was to know Gabrielle better later on. Myra found a strange change going on in herself. Before, she had not had ready wit in answering questions nor in arguing—but then, she reflected, she had never had to have any. What did the Marketown boys know—except Tim, who was always different.

She looked at Tim now as he sat across the table from her. They were in the Gold Room at one of the big hotels, a room that was not only covered with gilt paint, but that was further decorated with arabesques and ornaments and with a number of glittering little mirrors. Myra thought it the best word in elegance, especially the chairs done in red and black velvet.

Tim was handsome she thought. His hair was quite long and that made him look artistic. Myra did not know that Tim had not had the price of a hair cut so it was made his hair this length. Tim danced well too, being quick to pick up new steps.

"Is that fellow with your cousin in crazy about you?" he asked.

"No," Myra answered, her tone implying that she did not believe what she was saying.

"He acts it!" Tim answered. Myra thought his arm went around her more tightly. Was he jealous? This was a new thought, a delicate one. Emily often played one subtle against the other, in such a fashion that neither knew she was laughing at him behind her lazily waving fan. Myra thought she might try that game, too. Emily got such fun out of it.

But she wanted Tim alone. Tim never came daytime to call, he was his work. And in the evening she went out if Emily did and stayed if she stayed.

"I've such a headache, let's go home," she said as the dance ended. And they did, excusing themselves from the others who were out now for a long party.

Once in the apartment, Myra forgot her headache. She adjusted the little rose-shaded light on the table; it shed a soft glow over the couch, but its direct rays fell only on the table. Tim sat down on the cushions behind her, as she had seen Cousin Emily do.

"This is nicer than parties, isn't it," she asked.

"Yes," Tim said, "I can't stay awake at night after some of these all night affairs." Tim answered, "I'll go home early tonight."

They talked of Marketown after a little. Myra carefully avoided Ruth's name. Not that she thought mention of it would make Tim lonely, she could not have told what subtle reason made her keep away from all talk of her cousin.

Tim, it appeared, was homesick and he hated his ugly little room at the boarding house. He was used to home comforts and a mother's petting. Myra had a sympathetic hand on the hand. It was so cozy and quiet in the little apartment. The others would not be home for hours. Myra, her shoulders gleaming in the soft light, her becoming dress making her look so pretty and so suddenly grown up, was a new girl to Tim. She had the charm of novelty, the comfort of old friendship.

Her eyes smiled, her lips were parted.

Tim put his arms around her suddenly, thrilled at her soft velvet lips, then sat back, suddenly ashamed of himself. Would Myra think he was in love with her? That would be awful! He got up to go.

But Myra's hand held his. He in stant before she let go. He sat down again, and put his arms around her. Neither said a word, but he kissed her a second time. And a third! Then, thoroughly armed at his action, Tim got up abruptly and went home, mechanically picking up coat and hat in the hall. Myra still sat on the couch, a little pleased smile on her pink and pretty mouth.

A NEW SCHOOL BUILDING

Efficiency Man Has Adopted Ideas of Factories. School structure, an innovation a buildings for schools of higher education and said by the Carnegie Foundation would call for the "real contribution to the educational world," is nearing completion in Terre Haute, Indiana. It is the latest Polytechnic Institute, an endowed school for young men and which Dr. Philip Woodworth is the head. The building at once combines the simplicity that fact-factory plans would call for and the artistic bearing of a hall. It is thought to be the first of its kind in the country.

When Dr. Woodworth was brought to Terre Haute more than a year ago to see what could be done concerning the new building plans he found at first glance that they called for an outlay of $3,000,000. He began immediately a cost-reducing campaign by eliminating the material of the several buildings as well as recommending that they be arranged under one roof.

In suggesting to his board that simple lines be carried in the structure, the school president said: "Young men who are learning to be engineers should have the proper background for the pursuit of their studies. It would seem unfit for well-trained boys to appear in a drawing-room." Thus it came about that the revised plans of the Rose Polytechnic were along factory lines, in the simplicity thereof, and when completed it will have one-tenth of the original cost. The Carnegie Foundation took note of all the mentioned arrangements, making comment that the institute, a furnish good working space, capable of being developed into the best technical laboratories with a cost of approximately $3 per square foot of floor space. The price represents one-fourth of the average brick building construction, and it is exactly one-tenth of the same floor area designed on the types of the Princeton buildings by famous New York architects.

Students from many parts of the country have been attracted to the building. A number of captains of industry have written letters to the Rose Polytechnic president, congratulating the school in its annual environment.

Expressing the belief that young men trained in such an environment will have the advantage over men trained in institutions where the surroundings are essentially academic and classical and where the engineering work has to be done in a haphazard way.

DEBERTION DISCOURAGED

Clarence King, the well known geologist, was a man of nerve as of Salem, Mass. Daniel of Lynfield was with a government expedition in the far west, and the men he was compelled to employ were, for the most part, ruffians and desperadoes. One night one of them deserted, and Mr. King knew that it meant a stampede if the deserters were allowed to go unpunished. He chose a companion, on whose silence he could rely, overtook the deserter and landed him in a convenient spot. The runaway had substituted for three days on game, and his white horse was streaked with blood from the game hung on the saddle. Mr. King and his companion rode back, leading the crimson stained horse with all the deserter's belongings and said nothing. The men sent a committee to ask what had become of the deserter. "He is gone," said Mr. King impressively, "who anybody else who tries to desert will go too." The committee retired with a scared look, and there were no more desertions that trip—Philadelphia Inquirer.

MR. DANIEL MURPHY

A sad gloom was cast over Morrell on Feb. 4th when it became known that Mr. Daniel Murphy had passed his eternal reward at the advanced age of 73 years. The deceased had been in failing health for the past nine months and all that medical skill and tender nursing could do had been done, but of no avail. Mr. Murphy was a man of sterling character, upright and honest in his dealings with his fellow men and always changed to a wholesale basis, supplying dealers in eastern United States.

Mr. Murphy was twice married, his first wife being Miss Dora Adams of Portland, Maine. They had one son, Ubert. He was married to part. Addie Belle Randall, of Manchester, N.H., on October 30, 1880, and home Monday afternoon at two o'clock. Rev. Claude Allan McHenry R. and Edgar L. Godfrey, Kay, pastor of the Congregational church, of which Mr. Godfrey was trustee, and Eleanor Carleton Goddard, an associate member, will conduct the service. Relatives and friends are invited.

Mr. G. R. Godfrey is a brother of Mr. Charles Godfrey, North and was respected and admired by many friends. He was a member Royal, Mrs. John Ruckham, Hanter Lodge, A.F. & A.M., Ter River, and Mrs. John Parvater, Gardner Royal Chapter, Ivanhoe Kensington.

MR. GEO. H. GODFREY

One of Best Known Business Men of the City Had Been Active Until the Last Few Days. (Gardner, Mass. News.) George R. Godfrey, treasurer of the G. R. Godfrey Co., for more than 50 years a resident of this city and one of its best known business men, died at one o'clock this morning in his home, 25 Highland St. Mr. Godfrey had been in failing health for the past few years, but until a week ago he had maintained an active interest in his business. He was 77 years of age.

He was born in North Wiltshire, P.B.I., March 27, 1845, and at the age of 14 years started an apprenticeship at Portland, Me., in the harness business. In 1867 he moved to Hinesdale, N.H., and opened a small harness shop which was burned out two years later.

In March, 1869, he came to Charlottetown and founded a retail harness shop on Chestnut St., which was subsequently moved to the Old Bank block, Gardner Centre, where the business is now being conducted.

He celebrated his 50th business anniversary in 1920 and at that time the company was incorporated as the G. R. Godfrey Co., with Mr. Godfrey as treasurer.

When he started here, Mr. Godfrey employed one hand, and the output of the first year's business was less than 20 harnesses. The business saw a gradual and prosperous development, with Godfrey

NAPOLEON'S SUBMARINE MENACE

The dread of submarine attack was first experienced in England about 1800 when Robert Fulton's experiments with his submarine, then recently concluded in France, affected London society, still fearful of an invasion of the British Isles by Napoleon. According to the documents published in "Robert Fulton and the Clearmont" by A. C. Satchell, Fulton built his Nautilus during the latter part of 1800 and on Feb. 23, 1801, received authoritative word from Napoleon then first consul, to send his boat against the English fleet. Fulton appears to have accepted the proposition after considering the matter four days and agreed to the terms of contract. He was to receive 400,000 francs for the destruction of warships carrying more than 30 guns; 200,000 francs for those of more than 20 up to 30; 150,000 francs for those of from 12 to 20 and 60,000 francs for those of 10 guns, unfortunately nothing came of his experiments.

How the gods cured mortals of their ills is related in many Greek legends. Greek physicians were supposed to be divinely taught and directed in their treatment of patients. Fetichism and symbols prevailed and a serpent was chosen as a symbol of life and health. The Egyptians also used this symbol, and the Hebrews, on the occasion when Moses held up the serpent in the wilderness. In the recent War this symbol was used to represent medicine in the army. After the teachings of Christ had spread over the world the old gods were replaced by Christian saints. The virgin and the martyrs were invoked to cure disease. Some orders of monks practised pharmacy and medicine until a decree was issued by the church forbidding them to use knives. This left the surgery to the barbers, hence the origin of the red and white barber pole—the white for bandages and red for blood.
