Persecution of Poles
Premier Campbell introduced an Act to amend the County Court Act, which was read a first time.
Premier Campbell moved, seconded by Mr. Saville, the following resolution:
"Whereas in the western provinces of Poland illegally incorporated in the Reich, the Germans have ordered compulsory military service and auxiliary service in the eastern districts; and whereas the number of Poles shot or hanged for being true to their nation and state already exceeds one hundred and forty thousand; and whereas a considerable large number of men and women are suffering tortures in German prisons and concentration camps; and whereas about one million and a half Poles in the prime of life have been deported to Germany for forced labor in mines and factories;
"And whereas nearly two millions have been robbed of their farms, houses, work-shops and factories and have been driven out of the western provinces towards the east;
"And whereas food rationing has become more and more restricted for the Polish people, whom the Germans have subjected to increasingly unjust regulations;
"Be it therefore resolved that the Legislative Assembly of the Province of Prince Edward Island hereby express to the Polish people sincere sympathy for the hardships caused by atrocities repeatedly perpetrated against them by the Germans; and admiration for the valiant way in which the people of Poland have resisted and are resisting efforts to make them slaves. May the time speedily come when the right of men to live in freedom and peace shall be restored to the free life which has been trampled down today in all lands occupied by the Axis, and particularly Poland, and the crimes committed be deservedly punished."
In seconding the resolution Mr. Saville gave a review of the history of the Jews from the time of Abraham.
Hon. Dr. MacMillan said he presumed this was a resolution of the House, not of the Government. As a matter of courtesy, therefore, the seconded resolution have been from the Opposition. Every member, of course, he said, was in accord with the resolution. It was reported agreed to unanimously.
Hon. Mr. MacKinnon presented the report of the committee on printing and binding of Journals, which was adopted.

Civil Debentures
On motion of Hon. Dr. MacMillan the House went into committee with Mr. Matheson in the chair on an Act to authorize the issue of debentures for the City of Charlottetown.
The bill authorizes the issue of 20-year debentures to the amount of $25,000 to fund capital expenditures for permanent works during the year 1942.

military will recognize. Though with things in the present mess you'll get little help from them. Almost certainly you'll have to make your own way out of here."
"If we ever get back," Benny Connors said, gloomily. "What a mug I was to get into this game."
Bill Lorbrook was about to reply when the door opened suddenly, and Blesson's face came round the edge. "Pardon, Mr. Fenston. Hope didn't interrupt the Landlord's said."
"What is it, sir. Whenbawne. He and his niece are going up the lane, though you might like to know."
"Yes, thanks," Fenston turned to Lorbrook. "If there's nothing more you want to know, it might be a good idea if you and Benny went out and had a look at Whenbawne and his niece. It might be useful to be able to identify them at some future time."
"He'll have a good look at the niece if I know him," Benny grumbled as Bill got up.
Fenston thought it unwise for Bill to be seen too much in his company, so he stayed while the others went out.
"They're gone up to Lydden Woods," Blesson whispered. "It's their usual walk. If you hang about on the road you'll see them; they always come back this way."
Lorbrook led the way along the lane. As they approached the edge of the wood he asked: "Shall we sit by the verge, trying to look like a couple of tourists, or walk on into the woods until we meet them, or shall..."
"Tourists are pretty rare these days," Benny answered. "And it will be dark in the wood. There's plenty of cover along this lane. Why not make ourselves comfortable and wait?"
Bill nodded, and they left the lane to seek an observation post behind the hedge.
Suddenly Lorbrook held up a hand for silence. "What was that?" he asked. Then the sound came again. It was a scream, a woman's scream.

CHAPTER III
"YOU!"
Lorbrook did not hesitate when he heard the scream. "Come on, Benny," he cried, and dashed head into the wood. In spite of his haste he did not abandon caution, and was running parallel to, but clear of, the path, when he saw a woman running towards him. A hurried examination told Bill that the man presumably Whenbawne, was not seriously hurt, though unconscious.
Again came the cry for help, not far distant but muffled, then another cut off short as if a hand had been clapped over the caller's mouth.
Bill's brain worked at top speed. If Whenbawne was found by his niece, the obvious way being pressure on him to reveal the secret of his invention was to get at him through the girl, and this probably was the idea behind the attack.
He left Whenbawne to Benny's care and ran on until more by luck than good judgment, he came upon the clearing where was being enacted the scene he had visualized.
The girl was struggling fiercely, but was quickly being overpowered by two other young men. One of them caught her by the hair and tried to force her head and once more tried to scream, but the bigger of the two young men, who followed for further delay, struck her heavily across the mouth, and she cried out.
The triumph was short lived, for half a second later the big man was struck, not across the mouth, but just beneath the ear. The blow had been struck by Bill Lorbrook, possessed, and that was a lot.
Fortunately for the stranger, his head was hard. He staggered back, but he was not down. The other young man released his hold on the girl and fled. She would have fallen had not Bill caught her.
The girl looked up at the big man his chance. He leapt forward, and Lorbrook, hampered by the insensible girl, was unable to avoid a wicked swing of the jaw, followed by a knee jab low in the stomach. He doubled up in agony, and might have suffered much more had not Benny Connors lowered up straight at him.
He came crashing through the wood, making enough noise for ten men and a boy, and the big man apparently in control was at least a small army. He followed the lead of his companion and fled.
Bill was struggling to get his bearings back when the girl who the girl opened her eyes. She looked at him gratefully.
"Thank you. Then she stopped short as she exclaimed. There was no warmth in her voice. And there was an awkward silence.
Benny did not understand what was all about, but he felt the atmosphere had a certain electric quality.
At last the girl spoke again. "Will you be good enough to see if my uncle is safe, then we will go home. I am sorry to have caused so much trouble."
Benny was tongue-tied. He was entirely out of his element. Fighting he could understand and enjoy, but the wordless battle of eyes going on between Lorbrook and the girl left him helpless.
"The old boy's all right," he said. "He hasn't been hurt—why, here he is."
Whenbawne came along the path. He was a little shaky, but apparently well enough to be able to escort his niece home. He seemed to sense a tenseness between her and the man who had come to her help.
The girl put her arm in his. "You must thank Mr. Lorbrook and his friend, Uncle," she said. "They certainly saved us from a very nasty experience though it was quite bad enough as it was. Her hand was held over her bruised mouth.
Clearly Whenbawne was puzzled. He could not understand the situation.
He bowed courteously to the two men. "Thank you very much for what you have done," he said. "At the moment I am afraid my niece and I are too badly shaken to thank you as we would wish, but we both hope the opportunity to do so will occur very soon."
Lorbrook returned the bow, and murmured plaudits. His thoughts were far away. "Whenbawne," he mused, as the girl disappeared in the direction of The Hoping man. "Of course, I should have guessed."

HEALTH LEAGUE OF CANADA
Dr. Alan Brown, F.R.C.P., Physician-in-Chief at the Toronto Hospital for Sick Children, in his article, "Voluntary Organization is Safeguard of Democracy," appearing in "Health," organ of the Health League of Canada, emphasizes the essentiality of voluntary groups in the field of health.

Dr. Brown illustrates his contention by calling attention to the health problems facing the Canadian people as a whole. The means of preventing disease, he says, have largely been discovered by science. If all children, for example, were given toxoid, diphtheria, and tetanus, and if all water and milk supplies were pure, typhoid fever would vanish. The same is true of other diseases. But these diseases continue to take their toll. Pasturization of milk, he points out, is not applied all over the country, in spite of the proven necessity of the modern health department to take their toll. The field of health, public health nurses, etc., most of the country is without full-time health service. There are, states Dr. Brown, only fourteen full-time medical officers of health in Ontario. Such a situation is the need for a widespread educational program among the public, he says, and since the government over a period of many years has done little about it, the responsibility falls on the voluntary organization.

There is a need, says Dr. Brown, for publicity regarding what the voluntary organizations are doing today, as some people are sceptical as to their worth. Among the voluntary health societies the names the Canadian Order of Nurses, the Canadian Tuberculosis Association, the Canadian National Committee for Mental Hygiene and the Canadian Public Health Association. All these, he points out, are doing a pioneer work without waiting for governments, to act. The Health League of Canada, he says, supplies the need for a national organization which can carry on an educational program covering the whole field of health.

The League has, he states, been responsible for the establishment of the National Order of Nurses, the Venereal Disease program, as well as being active in the field of nutrition, pasteurization of milk, industrial health and diphtheria. By radio programs and press releases it has exercised a continuous effect on public opinion.
Education, stresses Dr. Brown, is the necessary preliminary to government action and the voluntary association is the best medium.

In Memoriam
MR. JOSEPH OSBORNE
He passed peacefully away at Riverdale on March 21st, Joseph Osborne at the early age of forty years.
Although deceased had been in failing health for a number of years, he was always been held out for his recovery, but about a week previous to his death his health began to grow weaker, despite the fact that every thing known to medical skill and tender nursing to restore his health was of no avail. Joe as we was familiarly known, was of a kind and cheerful disposition and was charitable to all whom he came in contact.
He was frequently visited, during his illness by his pastor Rev. W. Keefe and died fortified by the last rites of the church.
He will be sadly missed in the home where he was ever the beloved husband and father. But this great sorrow is tempered by the faith which consoles those bereaved through the lesson of his brief but exemplary life for which he is now reaping an eternal reward.
He leaves to mourn his passing his wife (nee Mary McQuaid) and three sons David, Leo and Joseph; also his father and the following brothers and sister: Patrick in New York; Pte. John in Kingston, Ontario; and Eddie and Mrs. John McMurrer of Riverdale.
The funeral which was largely attended was held from his late residence to St. Ann's Church, Lot 65, where Requiem High Mass was celebrated by Rev. W. Keefe who also officiated at the grave. The pall bearers were Theodore Tierney, Frank Egan, James McAffrey, Oliver McLeod, Burton McKinnon and Peter Carragher. May his soul rest in peace.
