GENERAL LIMANS
General Limans commanded the Belgian forces at Liège which bravely defended the city from the German attack. General Limans is sixty-two years old, and, unlike most of the commanding French and German officers, he had never before been active in service, the last occasion on which Belgian troops were employed being in revolution in 1880. He is well known as a mathematician and scientist, and he has recently been acting for some time as professor of mathematics in a Belgian military academy.

BRITISH GENERALS PRAISED FOR HEROIC FIGHTING.

An England was electrified by the report of Sir John French, commander of the British expeditionary army, in which, after detailing the thrilling retreat of his forces, always outnumbered four to one, from the battle field of Mons on August 24, to the lines Noyon-Chauny-La Fere on August 28, fighting every inch of the way, he tells how, when the divisions commanded by General Sir Horace Smith-Dorrien and Sir Douglas Haig were faced by serious loss on August 25, he asked General Sordet, commanding the French cavalry corps, to go to his assistance. General Sordet promised to ask the sanction of General Joffre, but said his horses were too tired to move before the next day. General French, however, General French says, later rendered valuable assistance. The text of the report of Field Marshal French is addressed to Lord Kitchener, the Secretary for War, and its publication indicates that the government is responding to the public demand for fuller information on the progress of operations, so far as the British forces are concerned, in France.

In this drawing the artist shows how the French villages are guarded at night. Every village is guarded by old men left behind, and it fares ill with a stranger if his papers are not in order. As most of the schoolmasters have left, the tottering curé is looked to for a decision.

In this picture the war artist of the London Sphere and this paper shows German prisoners of war at a French railway station. The German private soldier accepts his situation as a prisoner with calmness and equanimity, but the officer does not seem able to realize the situation and seems incapable of adjusting his mind to his environment.

HOW GERMAN TROOPS ARE MOVED—RECEIVING RATIONS AT RAILWAY STATION.

This illustration was drawn by Phillip Dodd, special artist for the London Sphere and this paper. The troop trains which the artist witnessed did not appear to have any specially adapted features about them. The soldiers were being transported in short luggage vans from which boards had been broken away in order to allow of ventilation and an outlook. The lads, who looked very young, streamed out of the wagons and down the platform to the temporary military kitchen, returning presently with their rations, an allowance of stew served in little black saucepans. Travelers showered chocolate and tobacco upon them. One lady obtained a box of cigars, which she proceeded to distribute among the soldiers.
