A HUSBAND TO MARCIA

By CAROLYN BEECHER

Chapter XLV

Influenza had claimed many victims despite all that the physicians could do. Among others, it had taken both the young clerk, for whom John had remained at the office, when his child was ill, and his wife.

John, with others of the office force, attended the funeral. A few of the neighbors, kindly folk, but in very moderate circumstances, had done all they could. There was the problem of the boy, now nearly six years old, a bright, good-looking little chap, with red hair and big blue eyes.

"Poor child, he will have to go into some sort of an institution," John heard a woman say. "They hadn't any relatives, either of them.

"Do you mean that there is no one related to the boy on either side?" John asked.

"Yes. His mother told me that if anything happened to them there was no one to take him. She died first, so didn't know he would be alone." Then: "I had planned to keep him a few days and see if I couldn't find a place for him, some nice place where they would be good to him. I have three of my own and living is high," she continued in an apologetic tone, "or I would try to keep him myself. He is a nice child, well brought up."

"I'll take him home with me," John impulsively said, "I have no children."

"His father said God would take care of him if anything happened to him, sir. I guess he was right," the kindly woman answered, wiping her eyes.

Not until he was on the train with the child did John feel any qualms over what he had done.

"Perhaps I should have consulted Marcia," he thought suddenly. "She isn't very fond of children". Then he looked at the bright faced little chap by his side, and as he drew him closely to him, he added: "She couldn't help loving him and it will be good for her."

He let himself in, holding the boy by the hand.

"You're awfully late, John—who is?"

"Yes, the train was a bit late. This is Kenneth, Marcia."

"Kenneth Baker," the child corrected in his high boyish voice."

"Yes, Kenneth Baker. We are hungry, aren't we Kenneth?" John frowned at Marcia, indicating that she should say nothing more before the boy.

"Yes—" his lip quivered, "yes, thank you. But I want my mother."

"Come, Kenneth, sit up and have a nice dinner with Uncle John," and from the almost forgotten stories of his childhood's memory, John Aldrich dragged stories that kept the boy interested until dinner was over. Then he put him to bed. Marcia declared it a ridiculous thing to do.

After the boy was soundly asleep tears on his cheeks because his mother wasn't there to hear him say his prayers, Marcia asked:

"What does this mean, John? How long is that child to stay?"

"Always, I hope, Marcia."

"Are you crazy, John Aldrich?"

"The child hasn't a relative on earth. You see what a well behaved little fellow he is. I hoped you would be willing to keep him, I thought of adopting him."

"Now I know you are crazy! Adopt a boy like that! Who's to take care of him, have the responsibility, I'd like to know, to say nothing of the expense such a boy will be to us? No, indeed! There are homes for such children. Put him in one".

"You are sure you won't keep him, Marcia? Of course I will not compel you to, it wouldn't be wise for you or the boy, if I did. But I haven't asked very much of you, Marcia. I have set my heart upon giving this boy a home, keeping him. Please take time to think it over."

"I don't want any time! He cannot stay here. I won't have him a day. Take him away with you in the morning. I never heard of such a thing! What possessed you to bring that strange child here, expecting me to keep him? Really John, I think you sould be in some institution yourself to do a thing like that."

"Don't say any more, Marcia, I'll take him away in the morning."

"I should say you would."

Later, when Marcia had gone to her room, John went quietly into the guest room, and sat beside the bed where his little guest lay sleeping, his bright red head showing plainly in the moonlighted room. When he left, John bent over and softly kissed the sweet face, then tip-toed from the room.

In the morning he packed the little suitcase that had held the boy's clothes and took that and the boy out with him, Marcia watching in silence.

"Good-by, pretty lady," Kenneth called as he left, his tiny fingers wound around John's.

GAS IN THE STOMACH IS DANGEROUS

Recommends Daily Use of Magnesia To Overcome Trouble, Caused by Fermenting Food and Acid Indigestion

Gas and wind in the stomach accompanied by that full, bloated feeling after eating are almost certain evidence of the presence of excessive hydrochloric acid in the stomach, creating so-called "acid indigestion."

Acid stomachs are dangerous because too much acid irritates the delicate lining of the stomach, leading to gastritis accompanied by serious stomach ulcers. Food ferments and sours, creating the distressing gas which distends the stomach and hampers the normal functions of the vital internal organs, often affecting the heart.

It is the worst of folly to neglect such a serious condition or to treat with ordinary digestive aids which have no neutralizing effect on the stomach acids. Instead get from any druggist a few ounces of Bisurated Magnesia and take a teaspoonful in quarter glass of water after eating. This will drive the gas, wind and bloat right out of the body, sweeten the stomach, neutralize the excess acid and prevent its formation and there is no sourness or pain. Bisurated Magnesia (in powder or tablet form, never liquid or milk) is harmless to the stomach, inexpensive to take and the best form of magnesia for stomach purposes. It is used by thousands of people who enjoy their meals with no more fear of indigestion.

LADY LAURIER DECLINES REQUEST TO BECOME CANDIDATE IN OTTAWA.

OTTAWA, Oct. 6.—An effort is being made by Ottawa Liberals to induce Lady Laurier to allow her name to be put in nomination for one of the seats in this city. Influential members of the Party today forwarded a communication to her requesting her to run, but Lady Laurier said tonight that while the request had not yet reached her, it might be stated that she would be unable to consider the proposal.

The idea of those with whom the project originated, was that if she were a candidate it would help to heal the division's due to numerous aspirants for the nomination, and also be the means of inducing French Canadian women to take advantage of the franchise to a greater degree than they have done hitherto.

LOSES LIFE BY A FALL

ST. GEORGE, Oct. 11.—Chtries Epps died this afternoon from the effects of a fall from the roof of his house this morning. He had climbed a ladder to examine the roofing for a small leak, George Marshall, jr., a near neighbor, saw a body fall through the air and running to the house found Mr. Epps on the ground. Mr. Epps was unconscious, and except for a few moments, he remained in this state until his death.

ALL DISLIKE RED.

Red has been called the king of color. The bull is not the only creature that resents red; the elephant, the horse, the dog, the cock, are all alike in this respect. It is sufficient, for example, to cover the doors and skylights of a kennel with red material to cause incessant barking and commotion among the dogs confined there in. A spider and a wasp, confined in a glass case, are reported to have dwelt happily together until a red cloth was placed against the sides, when the insects tackled each other at once and a fight to the death ensued.

Notice to Farmers

Don't Slaughter Thin Hogs

We note a tendency to sell hogs not properly fatted: in fact in very thin, poor condition. This is a serious mistake from the farmers' standpoint, as no matter whether prices go up or down from present figures, no packer will continue to buy this unfinished, inferior stock. To persist in selling it farmers will ruin the reputation of Island Pork Products, to their own immediate and future loss.

Finish your hogs properly, sell when ready, and you will best serve your own interests, as well as those of the industry in general.
