Fortune's Fool

He sat back then in his tall chair, and stared straight before him, a man bemused, considering. Thus awhile. Then from an inner pocket of his doublet he drew a tasseled yellow glove that was slim and long and sorely rubbed and stained with age. He sighed, and a tear, wrung by the anguish of this renunciation from his hardened, adventurer's heart, fell on his hand.

Abruptly then he sat forward, and smatching up the quill again he scrawled at fierce speed on the foot of the last of the written sheets:

"Here is a glove that you bestowed on me in the long ago. I wore it, as your knight wearing his lady's favor in the lists of life, proudly by the right of your gift and my unsullied honor. For years it was an amulet to maintain that honor still unscathed against all trials and temptations. Now that it has failed for this purpose through my own cowardice and unworthiness, you may not wish me to retain it longer."

That manuscript—for it is hardly to be termed a letter—still survives. Its faded characters cover some thirty pages of paper that the centuries have tinted yellow. It has been—as you will surmise—in my possession. It has supplied me with more than the mere elements of this history, which without it could never have been written.

He folded the sheets together, enclosing the glove within them, wrapped a thread of silk about the package, and on the knot of this he made a disc of wax which he sealed with his thumb. He superscribed the package, quite simply, "To Miss Nancy Sylvester," and stood it there on the table against the stem of the candlebranch within view of the first person who should enter that room.

Next he drew forth his still well-filled purse, and emptied its contents on to the table. One-half he replaced; of the other he made two packets, addressing one to Dr. Beamish and the other to Mrs. Dalloes.

Softly then he pushed back his chair, and rose. He tiptoed to the window, and peered down into the shadows where the watchman kept his post, propped in a corner of the adlocked doorway. A sound of morning came to inform Holles that,

This Nurse Sends a Message to Every Woman in Canada

Brantford, Ont.—During twenty-one years experience at nursing, I not only took Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription myself to keep up my health and strength, but I have also recommended it to many a patient, especially to prospective mothers, and think it is by far the best tonic and purgative that a woman can take, and for that reason I give it my highest endorsement.—Mrs. A. A. Foulger, 41 Sheridan Street.

Health is most important to every woman. You cannot afford to neglect it when your neighborhood druggist can supply you with Favorite Prescription in tablets or liquid. This Prescription is made in Dr. Pierce's Laboratory in Bridgport, Ont. Send 10 cents there if you wish a trial package.

as he had reckoned, the fellow step.

Holles went back. He took up his hat and cloak. Then, acting upon a sudden thought, he sought his baldric, and to the empty scabbard that was attached to it he fitted the slender dress rapier that Buckingham had left behind him.

Having passed the baldric over his head and settled it on his shoulder, he blew out the candles, and a moment later he was at the window again.

He scarcely made a sound as he straddled the window-sill; then very gently he let himself down, until he hung at full length, his toes not more than three feet above the kidney stones of the dark, empty, silent street. He dropped very lightly, and, as he was wearing no spurs, he made practically no noise at all. At once he set off in the direction of Sermon Lane.

Nevertheless, the evasion of Holles had not gone as entirely unperceived as he imagined. Slight as had been the noise he made, yet it had reached the window of the room immediately above, and by that window—which was the window of Nancy's room—sat Nancy, driven to that vigil by thoughts that rendered sleep impossible.

Her attention aroused by those furtive sounds below, she had leaned far out from the casement and peered down into the darkness. She had heard the soft thud of feet as Holles dropped to the street, and immediately thereafter the patter of his retreating footsteps. Very faintly she thought she made out at the same time the receding figure of a man, a deeper shadow amid shadows. But however little she may have seen with the eyes of the flesh, she saw all with the eyes of her imagination. She was on the point of crying out but suddenly checked herself, fearful of rousing the watchman and setting afoot a pursuit which, if successful, might be attended by direct consequence for Holles.

With trembling, fumbling fingers she kindled a light. Then with a rug wrapped about her over her nightgown, she made her way below. Thus she descended the stairs for the first time, and as she went she blamed herself bitterly—in her conviction that she would find things as she feared—for not having earlier taken this step and gone to seek him who remained so obdurately absent.

When on the following morning an anxious Mrs. Dalloes entered the dining-room in fearful quest of her charge, she found her there, at once to her infinite relief and to her finite distress. Nancy sat on the day bed under the open window. Beside her was a candlestick in which the single candle had been burnt to the socket, about her the floor was strewn with the sheets of Holles' letter, which had slipped from her nerveless fingers.

ADVERTISING IS RED BLOOD OF BUSINESS

MONTREAL, May 12.—That advertising is the life-blood of business and that to attempt to conduct any enterprise or sell any article to the public without carrying on a campaign of advertising was synonymous with trying to travel across the continent in a train to which no engine was attached, were the similes adopted by J. Allen Ross, of Toronto, to three hundred members of the confectionery, biscuit and chocolate industries of Canada, who met in their sixth annual convention here.

He stated that advertising and selling went hand in hand, and should if the best results were to be obtained.

Success in Canada must be obtained through intensive advertising and selling campaigns, Mr. Ross said.

"As a matter of fact," he said, "there are very few failures in Canada where advertising is properly handled, backed by a good product and a good selling force, and where the advertiser had the vision to maintain his drive over a sufficient period of time."

"A famous American once said, 'Nothing pays as it should without advertising. If you don't advertise, you have automatically clamped the lid on your store or business. Stop the blood flowing through your veins and you know what happens. Advertising is the red blood of business.'"

"I could cite to you for an hour examples of concerns who thought they were right in stopping advertising when their article was a success. A famous advertiser was asked on a train going to California why he didn't stop his advertising for a year and pocket the profit. He turned to his well-meaning friend and said: 'What would happen to this train if you took the engine off?'" death of your dear father. Words of comfort, or we would pour them forth, but we earnestly pray that you, our faithful workers of the Mission Band, and the remaining members of your family may be comforted and that the memory of him, who is gone, may be a source of blessing to you who mourn.

We recall many pleasant meetings held at your home and we shall ever remember the always hearty welcome accorded us by your mother and departed father. During his whole life, and even in his severe illness, he was always of a kindly and cheerful disposition.

It is the Christ who was crucified on Calvary, the "Christ of the outstretched arms," the great and glorious Being "who burst the bars of death and rose triumphant over the grave," who alone has power to heal the broken hearted. May you look to Him for comfort. Please accept sincerest sympathy from each member of the "Forward Mission Band of Orwell Cove."

"God calls our loved ones, but we lose not wholly what He has given.

They live on earth in thought and deed as truly as in His Heaven."

Signed on behalf of the Forward Mission Band.
