Daughters Of The Rich One Of Year's Best

FAMOUS SALTUS NOVEL IS EVERYTHING THAT CONSTITUTES PERFECT FILM

Lavishly produced and sympathetically directed, "Daughters of the Rich," which had its local premiere at the Prince Edward Theatre last evening, realized every promise held out by its title.

Gaebler's screen version of the first of Edgar Saltus' stories to be filmed surely will create a demand for more of that author's works. For it does fully tell a melodramatic story in so convincing a manner as to keep the most blasphemous treacher catching his breath and wondering what will happen next.

Like the two Al Lichtenhans attractions of which it is a sequel—"Rich Men's Wives" and "Poor Men's Wives," this picture has been staged with a cast that represents much thought and a true appreciation of the requirements of the parts.

Gaston Glass, who scored such a hit in "The Hero," again has a tremendously heroic role to which he does full justice. Ruth Clifford, who goes herself so lavishly and is so attractive a personality that she might be forgiven for indifferent characterization, does herself proud in the trysting part of "Sally Kandy"—the daughter of the rich man about whom the story revolves.

Ethel Shannon, the widely heralded discovery of B. F. Schubert, will have a difficult time living up to the work she has done in this, her first picture under her new contract. Miriam Cooper is, as always, truly appealing and convincing. Truly Shattuck, whom we all know through her vaudeville success, wins new laurels as the title-seeking mother. Viola Vale is her own sweet self.

Stuart Holmes deserves a paragraph all his own. The man we have followed through roads of intriguing villainy in the past has emerged into a fascinatingly human bit of characterization that threw an entirely new and interesting light upon him.

"Daughters of the Rich" is a fitting sequel to its highly successful predecessors of the screen. The highest praise that may be paid to a picture may be applied to it and summed up in these words:

It is great entertainment.

The fourth round of the "Fighting Blood" provided plenty of thrills for lovers of the manly art of special interest to them. General Wolfe, who was buried in Greenwich (a few miles further down the Thames), has a monument here; near it, during the war, the colours of the Canadian battalions were gathered. Close by is the memorial of Chatham, by whose orders Wolfe was sent to Canada; and in the north cloister is the grave of one of Wolfe's volunteers, Colonel Enoch Markham, who raised the Royal Musketeers when he returned home, fought in the war of Independence, and was buried in 1801 with the colours of his old regiment.

Bridge Foreman Falls to Death

The following account of the death by drowning of Wm. J. Lane, of Somerville, is taken from the Boston Globe of Aug. 5.

Mr. Ansel Baker, the hero of the story is a nephew of Mrs. C. W. Patterson of this city.

Fearing that a beam was about to fall upon him, as it was being hoisted into place yesterday afternoon on the new Western-avenue bridge over the Charles River, William J. Lane, 32, of 14 Rose st., Somerville, foreman of a crew working there, stepped from beneath it and, missing his step, plunged into the water.

He was not a good swimmer and gave evidence of being in great distress. Hearing his cries for help, Edward Gordon, 23, single, of 622 Fulton St., Medford, a carpenter, jumped over to aid his chief.

Lane, who had already sunk twice beneath the water, despairingly clasped his rescuer about the neck and both disappeared and did not come up to the surface again.

Some 100 yards away, Ansel Baker, 27, of 1 Lebanan st., Dorchester was working. Hearing the cries he ran to the spot, and, being told what had happened, immediately dove over the bridge.

Unsuccessful twice, on his third attempt he recovered the unconscious form of Gordon and brought him to safety and, in his fourth dive, recovered the body of Lane.

Gordon was taken to the Cambridge Hospital where he recovered within a short time. Three doctors worked in vain for three hours over Lane's body.

a fight against the "reign of Catholicism in America."

"Isn't it wonderful to have that decided definitely," said Mr. Alfild, who is the author of a book, "The Jew's Struggle for Religious and Civil Liberty in Maryland," which is now on the presses.

"Am I going to join?"

Mr. Alfild repeated the question several times.

"No," he answered, "I do not expect to order a new night gown. It is hot enough these days without extra sheets anyway. It is an invitation to a self-respecting Jew could accept."

The literature from "headquarters" found its way from the desk to Mr. Alfild's hands. The "personal invitation" from the Grand Kleagle came first. The circular announcing the "change in policy" followed.

Mr. Alfild, who served as a captain in the American Army during the World War and had a grandfather who is buried on American soil and comes of a family that boasts members in the American Army during three wars, smiled.

"It is wonderful," he declared, "to really be an American, particularly of the 100 per cent kind."

Doctors Condemn White Bread

BRADFORD, Yorkshire, Aug. 10.—"What to eat" was a subject debated by doctors at the British Medical Association meeting at Bradford recently.

Professor John Boyd Orr (Aberdeen) said that people did not eat enough fruit or drink enough milk. Potatoes and other farinaceous foods did not provide the requisite minerals.

We wanted calcium phosphates and iron in our system, and the first was provided by milk, green vegetables, and certain fruits.

Green vegetables, again, afforded iron. Spinach was of especial value for children.

Dr. J. S. Manson (Warrington) declared that too much food was taken in the way of fish and chips, savoury duck, tea, white bread and margarine—snipety tasty bits, instead of nutritious and substantial foods.

"Primitive man, he said, or civilized man under primitive conditions, made far greater efforts to secure food adequate for sustenance than the modern industrial worker, with his unlimited tea, bread, and margarine.

Dr. H. Scurlfield (Professor of Public Health, Sheffield University) pointed out that the "nut school" recommended a food which gave good energy to the jaws and cleaned the teeth.

The sucking of sweets and the eating of biscuits between meals was bad for the teeth and stomach.

"Three meals a day and nothing in between" was a good rule for children.

Dr. Simpson declared that there had been deterioration of crofters owing to the practice which had taken among them of taking tea instead of milk and porridge as in the past.

"Instead of oat cake," he said, "we have bakers' bread—the nearer we get to civilization the whiter becomes our bread."

to which the current will be distributed at high transmission lines are therefore required, and Mr. Snowden proposes that they should be laid down as a state enterprise, because in many districts they must be laid down long in advance of immediate requirements. Whether the state should itself undertake the work directly or whether it should subsidize other bodies who would do the work, is a point on which the government has not made up its mind. If the scheme is carried out it will mean that the rural areas along the lines of transmission will be able to get electricity cheap, and this would add very greatly to the amenities of village life.

The general scheme of electrical development which Mr. Snowden outlined has been placed in connection with the Lochaber hydro-electric scheme, which is to transform what is now virgin forest land in the Scottish Highlands into an industrial area for the production of aluminium and other metals.

"Mr. Beatty said that his trip to Scandinavia was part of a policy that he should personally see the company's branches and methods in Europe. In the last three years he had visited 10 European countries in which the Canadian Pacific conducted operations.

It is of vital necessity to Canada's development and I am not yet satisfied that we have evolved policies in a manner likely to give the most satisfactory results and secure for the country the proper kind of permanent settlers.

"Later," he said, "I hope to be in a position to make a more extensive announcement after consultation with the company's immigration and colonization officers and others in Canada who are seized of the desirability of more active and scientific measures."

(Canadian Press)

VIENNA, Aug. 11.—The mystery of repeated stoppages of the Innsbruck Bludenz express, which for several days in succession halted after passing a stiff grade at the Arelerg tunnel, has been solved by experts.

Investigation showed it to have been caused by the operation of a delicate automatic brake on the Hungarian coach which was attached to the express for the run from Budapest to Paris.

When this car was uncoupled at Innsbruck the train went through the tunnel normally, to the great joy of the superstitious train heads who had been attributing the stoppages to a "hoodoo."

scum which was an ideal breeding spot for flies and microbes. He suggested that an immediate meeting be held of the Board of Health in order that a resolution for the problem be found. It was decided to hold this meeting on Thursday night at 8 o'clock.

The meat and milk inspector read his report showing that 37 milk samples had been tested during the month and several carcasses of meat found unfit for consumption. He was asked by Coun. Yeo what action had been taken with those vendors whose tests had been below the average last month, and replied that each had appeared in the Police Court to answer for his delinquency. In the discussion that followed Coun. Rattray proposed that an adequate check be kept on the milk vendors by making it compulsory that they apply to the Council for their vending license.

Coun. Prowse, chairman of the Finance Committee, reported that tenders were about to be called for in regard to the new bond issues. Coun. Rattray, chairman of the Street Committee, stated that the year's permanent work program would probably be completed by Aug. 23rd and the total cost be given at the next meeting. He suggested that during the periodical dull season of the next few months work should be provided by additions to the year's program. Very favorable comments had been made on the street work done this year. Asked about the drainage difficulties on Lower Queen street, Coun. Rattray said that these would be overcome by raising the level of the pavements.

Coun. Taylor, chairman of the Market Committee, said that the renovations to the market building were practically completed and ready for inspection by the City Engineer.

The police report of Marshal Cameron showed a total of seven arrests for the month, thirteen for drunkenness, two for vagrancy, and two for breaking and entering.

Coun. Foster spoke of the very creditable showing of the Force in their new uniforms. Their appearance also drew praises from others of the Council.

Coun. Stewart as chairman of the Health Committee added his opinion to that of the City Health Officer, that a Board of Health meeting was necessary in order to deal with the condition of the stream in the eastern section of the city.

He was glad to note that the dust nuisance was abating but thought that a new watering cart was necessary for next year.

Coun. Moran, chairman of the Lighting Committee presented a resolution for the furnishing of additional street lights in the northern part of the city. The resolution was passed.

A resolution was also passed which appointed Mr. Peter McQuaid to fill the vacancy in the Housing Commission, caused by the death of the late Mr. F. Hennessey.

Coun. McLeod proposed that a telegraphic invitation be extended to the Oddfellows Grand Lodge, that they hold their annual session for 1925 in this city. Coun. Rattray in approving the suggestion stated that a former Grand Lodge held here was one of the largest in the history of the Order. If next year was held here it would mean an influx of over one thousand people who would remain in the city almost a week.

Coun. Prowse mentioned the New Glasgow excursion scheduled for Wednesday and proposed that a concert be arranged in the evening by the band in attendance.

This concluded the evening's business and the meeting adjourned.
