STRANGE TACTICS

The already hurried pace increased until they were doing well over 60 miles an hour with occasional spurts up to 70.

"Best car he's using," the Major murmured.

"Father. Well handled, too."

"You're right. Didn't rely on my two-seater as originally intended. It's called a 'sports', but this family carriage of your knocks spots off it, for all its dimpled appearance. What's the maximum?"

"Heaven knows! Once I touched 80, allowing for the speedometer, and there was still plenty of life in it. Hullo—our quarry is off on another tack!"

Smith also swung off to the left, slowed down to negotiate a tiny village street, and picked up speed in a way that would have been dangerous with a more modern car. Hereabouts the road snaked alarmingly with hairpin bends and almost right-angled turns at annoyingly close intervals.

Quite plainly an attempt was being made to throw them off the track, for the leading car was now roaring along in a most reckless manner, taking corners without appreciably slowing down and ignoring the thirty mile limit signs in built-up areas.

Once they came to a traffic signal set at stop. The car in front took no notice, racing across with throttle open and hooter blaring wildly. A heavy lorry with the right-of-way stopped in its tracks as the driver jammed on all his brakes. They could hear his frenzied cursing as Smith took advantage of a fortunate change of light, though he, also, would probably have risked an accident had the red warning continued to glow.

"Better tell your chap not to be too daring," Mosson said. "Broomie shook his head. "Leave it to Smith," he replied. "He'll not smash a sup."

The Major was less optimistic especially when they plunged again on to a main thoroughfare without making a preliminary legal halt.

"Back on the Guilford road," Smith yelled so loudly that the speaking tube was unnecessary.

They were back almost to the point where they had deviated, and the hunted man was accelerating up to his maximum. At that hurrying pace even the sixty horse-power pumper had difficulty in keeping up, though it possessed a slight advantage on the steeper gradients, which were becoming more numerous.

Suddenly they were on the outskirts of Guilford, always a difficult town to negotiate. To their surprise, the man in front slowed down to what was, by comparison, almost a crawl.

Owing to the heavy traffic, their own chauffeur was forced to follow in line, the leader making no effort to cut in when a horse-drawn delivery van assumed pride of place.

"What in the world is he up to?" demanded the major.

"Hoping we'll be hauled in these busy streets," was the only explanation Broomie had to offer.

Mosson shook his head. "It isn't that," he retorted. "But we'll soon see."

"He's pulling up now sir."

The wild ride was over. Equally smoothly they glided to the pavement. They saw the stranger chauffeur alight and click the door open after him and as he walked nonchalantly away, Broomie uttered a startled exclamation, his pointing finger pointing out in an unusually serious dramatic gesture.

"No parking here, sir," the officer said politely. He glanced at the card produced by the Scotland Yard man and his expression changed. "I suppose this does make a difference, sir," he added. "Still, regulations are regulations, as I just told the man who drew up just in front of you. Are you calling on business? If so, there's a parking place at—"

"One moment, constable! About that order driver; what does he want?"

"Nothing at the station, sir. Told me he was just slipping into the tobacconist nearby and wouldn't be long."

Mosson moved quickly. "Come on," he snapped. "You, too, officer. We may need you."

They strode across the intervening space and crowded into the tiny cubicle opening a freshly purchased packet of cigarettes. He moved aside with studied deference as if regarding the newcomers as potential customers.

"You've led us a dance!" the Major snapped.

"Sir? I suppose you are addressing me?"

"Yes I am, and don't pretend to be surprised."

"I'm afraid some mistake has been made. The policeman told me it didn't stop longer than necessary to build-up areas."

"No use, my man. You're well aware I want to know something about that letter you brought me worth, earlier this afternoon."

"Letter sir? Of course I remember it very well, owing to the unusual circumstances."

"Go on!"

"Somebody came out of the post office as I was passing, and stopped me to ask if I would take it along as the postman had missed it."

"The postmistress would be able to bear me out if there is anything to it."

"There is, Plenty. In the first place who is your employer when you don't happen to be driving idly round the countryside acting as deputy postman?"

The man's expression altered. This was an unanticipated method of approach. Up to this point he had been prepared to brazen things out, trusting to luck to get him out of a tight corner. Delay while inquiries were being made at Ensworth would have aided him.

"My employer is Mr. — Any way, what has it got to do with you?"

"Are you making a charge, sir?" broke in the constable, anxious to put the proceedings on a proper footing.

"Maybe I am. Can we get this man into the station door without any fuss?"

The chauffeur scowled. "Suppose I refuse to go? You've got nothing on me."

"You'd be very unwise to resist," the Major retorted. "And if we have got—nothing on you, why are you concerned at the outcome of a little questioning?"

"I don't know all about that, I tell you. My dear fellow, there's no need to be afraid. We don't indulge in the 'third degree' in this country, if that is what you are suggesting."

Kinsmen Pass Milk Objective

Pledged to deliver one and a half million quarts of milk to Britain's children, the Kinsmen Clubs of Canada and Newfoundland are chafing today another huge shipment of 140,000 quarts which brings the grand total to date to 100,000 more than the objective announced last September.

"Immediately following our National Convention of last August, we promised Britain 1,000,000 quarts of milk for the children in the bombed areas," H.A. Rogers, Kinsmen National War Services Chairman, told the press, "and with our purchase of today, we have reached that objective; passed it; and we are now well started on our next million quarts three and a half months ahead of schedule."

The 88 Kinsmen Clubs in Canada and Newfoundland have all shared in the task of supplying this important contribution and vital food to the kiddies in the Old Land. Through Kinsmen sponsored money-raising activities, dances, bingo games, auctions, carnivals, salvage campaigns, mile-of-pennies, etc., the Kinsmen have raised 18,000 MILK-FOR-BRITAIN bottles in neighbourhood stores, in all Kinsmen communities, the money necessary to purchase and deliver this milk has been raised. Other organizations, men, women and children in all parts of Canada and Newfoundland have accepted the invitation of the Kinsmen and through contributions of nickels, dimes, and large sums, have shared in this work of supplying needy children "over there."

Howard DeCew, National President of the Association of Kinsmen Clubs, in a radio broadcast message will thank all people of Canada who have contributed to the MILK-FOR-BRITAIN Fund and so co-operated with the Kinsmen in this nation-wide war effort.

Mr. DeCew's message says, in part: "Our sincere thanks to the many other organizations and to the people of Canada who have assisted our campaign so willingly and generously."

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE!

Dear White Ribboners:— We have been greatly encouraged by the acknowledgment from Lady Reading, chairman of the Women's Voluntary Services for Civil Defence in England, of the cheque for $112, which our organization sent last October. Lady Reading said this gift was received with "immense gratitude for the generosity and understanding of our needs." She pointed out that our money would purchase not only the "Trench Kit" was equipped with insulated urns, stove water tank, taps and food trays, to serve hot lunches to 200 people, but it will also provide a canvas box to be carried on the rear luggage rack of a car. This model is called a "Mug-in-Time" and because of its portability is particularly useful in bombed areas to serve the homeless and provide a meal for the fire fighter and rescue squads, when they cannot leave to go home for necessary refreshments.

This canteen contains milk bottles, mugs, etc., and the large size can supply hot tea to 150 persons. We hope all Unions feel that this is a great opportunity to send sympathy in a very practical manner to friends in Britain, and that the funds may be forthcoming for another gift to them this year as already planned.

The time has been extended until March 31st to receive our contributions of fifty cents per member for the Dominion Home Centre for Petawawa Camp, details of which have been sent in my circular letter to all our Provincial and County Officers.

With deep appreciation for all enthusiastic co-operation in these projects

Yours in the Work,
 Amella F. Usher.

ALCOHOL AND HEALTH

Man is a member of society and owes a duty to others. The rule for the Christian is stated by St. Paul: (Rom. 14:21) "The right course is to forego the eating of meat or the drinking of wine, or doing anything that tends to a brother's fall."

Inseparable from a man's duty

THE RIGHT TO BE CHEERFUL

I have in my lifetime passed from an era of peace through various unsettled stages into a world which, in Sir Thomas More's phrase, is "ruffled and fallen into a wilderness," but I retain enough of the disengagement of the earlier world to refuse to surrender my right to cheerfulness. I was brought up in times when one was not ashamed to be happy, and I have never learned the art of discontent. I preserve my devotion to things "afar from the sphere of our sorrow." It seems to me that those who loudly proclaim their disenchantment with life have never been really enchanted by it. Their complaints about the low levels they dwell in ring hollow for they have not known the uplands. I cannot recover the vigour of youth for my limbs, but through memory I can recapture something of its ardour for my mind.
