A Morning Smile

WHERE'S PERRY?

He took her in his arms. "Oh, darling, if he mirrored, 'I love you so please say you'll be mine. I'm not rich, like Perceval Brown. I haven't a car, or a fine house, or a well-stocked cellar; but, darling, I love you, and I cannot live without you!'"

Two soft arms were around his neck, and two ruby lips whispered in his ear: "And I love you, too, darling; but—where does this man Brown live?"

McCowan was suffering from pains, so he sent for the doctor. "Ah," exclaimed the latter, after examining him, "I'm afraid you've twisted yourself somewhere."

And McCowan dropped into a dead faint.

NEEDLES HUSHED TO LET TONGUES CLICK

There'll be no more clicking of knitting needles in Grinnell college dining-rooms this year. The women's self-government league board has just put the ban on knitting at the dinner table.

THIS MORNING THE DIONNE QUINS HAD 5 MORE BOWLS OF QUAKER OATS

Mothers everywhere are following the brilliant example set by specialists in charge of the Dionne Quins. Quaker Oats daily is becoming a must everywhere because its Vitamin B keeps 'em fit!

Every human body must be fortified with Vitamin B—the precious 3-purpose Vitamin that combats NERVOUSNESS, CONSTIPATION AND POOR APPETITE due to lack of Vitamin B. Give all the family Quaker Oats, because these three conditions prey on the energy of thousands, young and old.

Do you know that you can bake potatoes in half the usual time if you parboil them first and they still have the flavor of baked potatoes?

The HOUSEWIFE and HER ACTIVITIES

LITTLE HANDS

Soft little hands, that stray and clutch, Like fern-fronds curl and uncurl bold, While baby faces lie in such Close sleep as flowers at night that fold.

In Czechoslovakia bricks are now being made of straw.

Approximately 30 cents' worth of electricity is contained in the average flash of lightning.

An automobile manufacturer must make parts for a discontinued make of automobile for five years.

Even when made of frozen salt water, icebergs contain little salt. The salt separates from the water as it freezes.

BEEF TEA

Cut off every particle of fat, and cut the gravy beef into small pieces. Cover a pound of beef with a pint of cold water and put in a warm oven for 4 hours, or cook in a double boiler. Season after it is made.

If you will line your garbage pail each day with a newspaper all grease will be absorbed and the daily washing of this utensil can be avoided.

PLAYTIME AT SEA

Small passengers on the Queen Mary will have luxury (says the Star.) The children's playroom will have a fourfoot washable rubber wainscot all the way round, on which children can draw in coloured chalks, as well as a chute, a Mickey Mouse cinema, an aquarium and several exciting looking caves.

Some of the toys will have a real nautical flavour. Instead of a rocking horse there will be a two-seater rocking ship under full sail, and a rocking fish.

Do you know that you can bake potatoes in half the usual time if you parboil them first and they still have the flavor of baked potatoes?

A POOR FLOW OF GAS

If the flame on your gas stove is poor, boil the burners in a strong solution of washing soda and water. It may only mean the burners are clogged with accumulated grease; and a good thorough cleaning will do the trick.

ASSORTED SIZES

Many times the new potatoes you have bought are of different sizes. It is wise to sort them and use those of uniform size in cooking. Otherwise, you will have the trouble of the small potatoes falling to pieces while waiting for the larger ones to be done. Sort them into groups before paring.

A BALANCED MEAL

Balance your dinner with your dessert. With a vegetable dinner serve a rich dessert containing milk and eggs but with a substantial meat dinner, fruit or a light pudding is a wise decision. If fruit cup, select a vegetable salad, but if you start dinner with a cream soup a light fruit salad is very nice. Avoid repetition of any sort, such as tomato soup and tomato salad. If thought out beforehand a dinner can always be well balanced and therefore very enjoyable.

STYLE WHIMISIES

Veiling has a tendency to be clustered at the hat, falling in a soft drape.

Purple is the vogue in everything from purses to handkerchiefs. The luxurious hue is especially popular as a contrast to gray.

Very regal are the new evening coats, high waisted with heavy satin ruching.

No, Girls, Very Few Fairy Princes Come Riding Down the Streets These Days, Hence You Cannot Expect to Find Too Much Romance When it Comes to Picking a Husband

Dear Miss Dix—A man five years younger than I want to marry me. He is kind, reliable, gentle, generous. Interested in my hobbies. He comes up to my ideals. He is careless about his manners and it jars my nerves. He is not good-looking and does not fascinate me. It has always been my dream to marry a man who swept me off my feet, and I resent it that this one does not. I am 37 years old and I realize that my chances are slight of finding another opportunity to marry and that the space of time in which I hope to have a child is short. That is something I greatly desire. But I wonder if I should remain single and live in these dreams, or marry. A. B.

Answer: That is a question that no one in the world can answer but yourself, for only you can tell whether you prefer dreams that never can come true to the reality of a warm human companionship.

I don't know anything more idiotic than the idea that women have that in a prosaic world some shining Fairy Prince is going to come riding down their street on a milk-white steed, and that when they see him they will be swept up into a cloud of mist and will partake with surging emotions of joy, and that every time they hear his footsteps they will go hot and cold, and experience all sort of hectic emotions.

A lot of women go through life looking for the Fairy Prince and expecting to be smitten down by a thunderbolt, and because nothing ever happens to them and all the feeling they ever experience is a warm affection for some man, they think they have never been in love. And because no man who even remotely resembles a Fairy Prince ever comes their way they think of whether they can be happy married to men whom they do not love. They think nothing of the mass of the man who loves a woman and who would have made them splendid husbands. So there you are, and plenty of women like you are old maids because they preferred their dreams to a real husband.

But one thing I would like to impress upon you when you are making your decision. Give the man a square deal. When women marry men for mercenary motives they never seem to think of the man's side of the matter at all, or to realize how dishonestly they are treating him. They only think of whether they can be happy married to men whom they do not love. They think nothing of the mass of the man who loves a woman and who would have made them splendid husbands. So there you are, and plenty of women like you are old maids because they preferred their dreams to a real husband.

No man would marry a woman under such circumstances. Nor would any man marry a woman who looked down upon him, who thought herself better than he, and who was ashamed of him.

It seems to me that this man is offering you so much that you might well overlook his little lapses in manners, but if you are going to let them make you unhappy, then let him alone. He is free to marry some woman who will care more for his kind heart and the luxuries he can give her than she will about his deficiency in manners.

Dear Dorothy Dix—I have been engaged to a man for six years. Four years ago he gave me a hopechest, which I have spent time and money in filling. A year ago he gave me my silver. Yet he seems to have absolutely no intention of marrying. Won't even discuss the subject, and when friends ask him when we plan on getting married he answers quickly: "There is no hurry." This is all very heart-breaking to me and incomprehensible, as he tells me he loves me and he is financially able to marry. I feel that I am wasting the best years of my life on him without knowing the outcome. What would you advise? ELSA.

I strongly advise you to have a showdown and tell him he must either name the wedding day or you will break the engagement. And mean what you say. Don't let him persuade you to go on with an indefinite engagement that will wear out with weary waiting.

Tell him that you want to know just exactly where you stand; hat you are not trying to force him into a marriage against his will, and that if he is not as anxious to marry you as you are to marry him that the affair is ended and you part good friends. Make it clear, however, that you are not going to be one of the sentimental, wishy-washy girls whom a man can monopolize while she is young and fresh and gay and then drop when she has grown old before her time and haggard waiting for him to name the day.

There are plenty of men like that. Social parasites. Men whose attentions are without intentions, who enjoy mild affairs with pretty girls, but who never marry them. They pick out the best looking and most attractive girl of their acquaintance and play around with her until they drive all the other men away, and then they drop her for some younger and fresher girl.

In your heart I think that you know that this man has really tired of you and never intends to marry you. That is a hard thing for a woman to face if she cares for the man, but the sooner you do it, the better. When a man really loves a girl and intends to marry her, and is able to do so, he hurries up the wedding day. He doesn't keep putting it off.

Dear Miss Dix—I am a girl of 17 in great trouble about my parents. They are on the verge of a break-up and I feel that I cannot stand for them to be divorced. They are always picking on each other, saying dreadful things to each other, calling each other bad names, and so on. There is never a moment of peace in our home. I have tried to make them forgive and forget, but it is no use. What can I do? S. M.

I wish I knew, my child. It is a terrible thing for parents to be willing to wreck the lives of their children in order to gratify their spleen against each other, but they do it and nothing stops them. Perhaps you will be happier if they do separate and one or the other gives you a quiet home.

Here's an important bolero costume for spring that you can wear all summer. It is wine-red crepe dotted in white. A companion print in white with wine dots is used for the dress collar, sash and "hanky" that is tucked into the pocket. The dress is practical as well as lovely without the jacket. The slim skirt has an inverted pleat for easy walking.

It is such an easy little model to make. It requires only 3/4 yards of 39-inch material with 1/4 yards of 39-inch contrasting for the 16 year size.

Style No. 1710 is designed for sizes 14, 16, 18 years, 36, 38 and 40 inches bust.

Other nice suggestions for this model for summer are white or pastel tub skirts, pastel linens, or pottery shades in new shantung cotton weave.

Price of PATTERN 15 cents in stamps or coin (coin is preferred.) Wrap coin carefully.

MY LADY MELODY

By ARTHUR HARDY Author of "The Merry Masquerade", "Love Song", etc., etc.

At intervals the diners had been leaving their tables and going to Eddie Hales to shake hands with him, eager to be seen talking to a celebrity. Eddie had been drinking, but had eaten nothing. He could always be relied upon to do the unexpected in the way of showing off.

The woman violinist was playing as she walked among the tables, making the instrument screech. As she drew near the table at which Eddie Hales was seated, the dance band conductor snatched away her violin and bow. He then addressed the maitre d'hotel, who bowed and laughed, spreading his hands submissively.

The next moment Eddie Hales was standing on the platform and striking all sorts of weird notes and squeaks and squeals out of the borrowed instrument.

"Bravo, Eddie," he shouted. "He grimaced. He danced some eccentric steps. He imitated hens and farmyard animals and wild beasts upon the violin, and made it bark like a dog, and in the end, amidst thunders of applause, he began to strut about the cafe, holding out the collection tin which he had borrowed, and cadging money from the diners.

What is more, he got it, stuffing silver and folded notes into the tin. With a malicious smile he came to the table at which Howard and Sheila sat.

"I am sure, sir," he said in a tone of raillery, "you will want to contribute lavishly to a good cause, especially as you have such a charming companion to-night."

Howard could have kicked him. "No," he answered brusquely. Sheila touched his arm. "Oh, Howard, do please."

He smiled at her, but was firm. "No, I will not. The fellow is a mountebank."

Eddie Hales grinned and taking a crumpled ten shillings note, which might or might not have been his, from his pocket, he slid it into the tin.

"From the mountebank," he said, grinning at Sheila, "on behalf of the gentleman."

The incident ruined the evening for Sheila. The woman with her collecting tin, unexpectedly full, was bundled out of the cafe, Eddie Hales joined a group of "friends" at a table some distance away. Howard paid his bill and then drove Sheila to Pleasant Place.

He was very quiet during the drive. He had not much to say after they arrived home.

"Howard, you disapprove of my musical friends," she said, wanting to tease him.

"I do not look upon that little blackguard as your friend," he answered.

Never yet had he listened to the Radio when alone. And the very first time he wanted to employ the confounded thing the one programme that appealed to him had been ignored by the autocrats of the B. B. C.

The wealthy amateur raised up the Radio papers and dashed them down on the floor, then rubbed his shoes on them.

So much for Radio.

There was yet another who had heard Sheila Huntley play leader with the Max Maurice orchestra that night, but he had not raided a privileged seat in the studio.

Ronald Garner Owen, amateur musician of considerable talent but no outstanding ability, patron of music and man of wealth, was confined to his house by his doctor.

A severe chill contracted several days ago when he had foolishly discarded his coat while being driven in a motor car at night with the windows down, had caused the trouble.

But one thing Garner Owen was determined upon; he would not stay in bed. Instead, he prowled about the big house or mansion in which he lived, moving from study to music room, from music room to dining room, thence to the drawing room and so back to the study once more; and he found relief in none.

He loathed the slops they gave him. The champagne was distasteful, though the specialist had agreed he might indulge in it since the stimulant would help to fight the chill.

Beautiful New Designs in the Guardian Wonder Package

The use of colored sheets and pillow cases makes our beds so much more attractive. Use your favorite color and embroider the edge of sheets and cases in a deeper shade of same color, or in white using the scalloped border as shown in above illustration. A monogram or initial in same color also adds to the beauty of your bed linens. Letters in three different styles of printing will be found on another sheet in the Wonder Package of designs.

Any of the accompanying designs are suitable for towels or bed linens. Dresser scarfs in same design. Use either solid and eyelet work or outline and need stitches.

The basket is gracefully proportioned and lovely when well done. Either in color, or solid white. A bridge luncheon cloth in green, with either the basket or rose design embroidered in solid work.
