Fruit Firm Opens Branch In City

Mr. J. G. Willett, President and General Manager of the Willett Fruit Co. Ltd. Saint John and Moncton, together with Mr. Chas. Morrison, Saint John, director, are now in the City superintending the opening of a branch warehouse at 71 Queen St.

Their firm is this year celebrating their thirtieth anniversary by extending their services to cover the Island territory. Mr. Willett began business in Saint John as a commission agent single handed in October, 1905, the business expanding from this small beginning until a complete line of all kinds of foreign and domestic fruits were added to the varieties of local fruits and vegetables usually handled by local commission agents. About fifteen years ago a Dried Fruit department was added, and in recent years a new development was the packaging of Raisins under the firm's own trade mark.

The firm has kept up with the changing methods in business by installing modern machinery for washing vegetables and recleaning of dried fruits before being shipped out to customers. Specially designed rooms for the ripening of bananas and tomatoes scientifically and modern storage facilities are provided in both St. John and Moncton warehouses, which were specially designed before being built for the fruit and produce trade.

Because of the health articles in leading magazines and the general belief that fresh fruit and fresh leafy uncooked vegetables are very essential for good health, the consumption has increased by leaps and bounds in the last decade, which calls for continuous supplies being always on hand to satisfy the ever increasing demand. The retail trade in groceries and fruits are cordially invited to inspect the fully assorted stock of fresh fruits and imported vegetables now on display, as the Company opens its doors for business this morning.

Mr. J. Pope Clark, Charlottetown, with several years experience in the fruit jobbing business, will be in charge of sales, assisted by Mr. Harold Partridge and Mr. Geo. Stammers. The branch is being managed by Mr. C. Morrison, Saint John.

SEAT TO GO BY ACCLAMATION

MELVILLE, Sask., Dec. 4.—An acclamation appeared in prospect tonight for E. W. Gerrard, K.C., Liberal candidate for Melville constituency in the Dec. 16, Saskatchewan by-election.

Conservatives, meeting in Balcarres have followed the lead of the C. C. F. party and decided not to nominate a candidate.

The by-election has been necessitated by retirement of former Premier Gardiner, now Federal Minister of Agriculture.

WARNS AGAINST EVILS UNDER DEMOCRACY

Need of Purging Existing System of Abuses Stressed By Mr. J. A. Dewar.

Following is the text of the timely and thoughtful address on "Democracy Versus Dictatorship," delivered at the St. Andrew's Day dinner Monday night by Mr. John A. Dewar, ex-M.L.A., New Perth: While the seeds of a despotism will spring up and flourish in the roughest and most barren of soils, it is radically different with democracy. The land has to be very carefully prepared. The crop will be tardy and while the reformer sleeps the enemy will come and "sow tares."

While I believe in democracy in preference to absolutism as a form of government, I am aware that a large number of people have lost faith in its efficacy, and it is on trial and challenged as it never was before.

This conditions recalls to mind Edmund Burke's famous epigram "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty."

Democracy having stripped certain classes of power and privileges it is natural that they should ever strive to cripple and destroy it. In discussing this question I intend to confine my remarks pretty much to the English speaking world, because I believe that it has the greater expression in the United States and the British Commonwealth of Nations than in any other country, with the possible exception of Switzerland.

The old saying "The King can do no wrong," was as false and misleading as the modern expression "The voice of the people is the voice of God." The King was capable of all kinds of wrongs, as the people are capable of all kinds of mischief.

The growth of democracy is very slow because education and social and economic freedom will need to precede electoral freedom, or the people mistaking it for license may not know how to use it. Great riches and poverty are alike the foes of liberty, the former by creating luxury that enervates; the latter by depressing the spirit of a people.

Though the Barons wrested the "Great Charter" from King John in the early years of the thirteenth century and through the efforts of Simon DeMontfort and others a Parliament was granted to the people of England, the growth of representative institutions was slow and was not perfected until centuries would pass without the summoning of Parliament and Kings were not alone to blame. Even the great Protector who won his position by a fight in defence of the rights of Parliament at last became a dictator and ruled alone.

Agriculture was the basic industry upon which their superstructure of greatness was built. The farmers were oppressed and impoverished like those on the Continent of Europe. People lived in hovels and the comforts of life were few. A tight roof and even a floor were rare among the labouring population of Europe not very long ago.

It was not however the absence of creature comforts, even the simplest that constituted the greatest hardship of mediaeval life. There has well said: "Man's greatest possession is himself and this is a very modern possession, which may endure. The right to one's self, to use one's own faculties, physical and intellectual; one's own brain, eyes, hands, feet, in a word to his soul and body, is an incontestable right. Under the old regime in many parts of Europe the individual had no such inalienable right. When the government followed the hatcher to the shambles, and the baker to the oven. When the farmer could not take the produce which he raised to market until he had brought leave to do so, nor consume what remained of his grain until he sent it to his rulers mill to be ground, nor full his clothes on his own works, nor sharpen his tools on his own grindstone.

If there had been more opportunity for individual endeavor, if a man could have had his own field, his own cattle, and the individual right to use his property and his own faculties as best he might, political liberty would not have been so long delayed. Introduction of new methods, with the seeding of grasses and clovers, was slow, but it was not until these new methods were practised that improvement of agriculture first became possible. Enclosure of the open fields which had slowly begun long before made large increases in the eighteenth century, and with separate ownership came individual opportunity and private initiative.

Lord Charles Townshend and Lord Leicester introduced the four course system of agriculture, which made turnip and clover, or grass important crops in English farming, and thus taking advantage of private ownership of fields created one of the greatest modern benefits of the revolution in human conditions which mankind has known in the last two thousand years. By creating an era of prosperity and a lofty spirit of independence among the masses, Britain has built up a system of democracy that challenges the admiration of the world. When it sent the King to the guillotine, it was not because he had done wrong, but better still, would not want to even if he could. A realm in which the scales of justice are justly held between all classes. Without one law for the rich and another for the poor. Where crime is punished and merit brings its own reward. On this side of the Atlantic we are inclined to pride ourselves on our democratic institutions, but I think they are somewhat overworked. It is to the credit of the United States that they have developed under republican institutions, the richest and one of the greatest nations of the world, in a material sense at least. But as the years roll by the making of government and law is not functioning too well "in the land of the free." Forces have arisen which will have to be grappled with, the subduing of which should not be beyond the resources of so great a country.

Across the front of the court house in Worcester, Massachusetts, runs in great letters the inscription: "Obedience to Law is Liberty." Harry Emerson Fosdick, one of their noted writers, makes these comments on this inscription:

That truth is the foundation of the democratic experiment. That idea, not a wild and wayward disobedience is the true basis of democracy.

There is no magic by which the democratic experiment can be saved. If mad insistence on individual liberty continues to crowd out sober recognition of social obligation.

That lawlessness is rampant needs no long demonstration. Consider the fact that in the last thirty-five years we have lynched over three thousand people.

We would like to plead the difficulty of dealing with the colour line in this country, but over a thousand white people have been lynched in that time.

Or consider our criminal record. In one year Chicago with its two millions and a half of inhabitants had twenty more murders than the whole of Great Britain with their thirty-eight million people.

And the City of New York had six times as many culpable homicides as the City of London. I look upon the City of London as the greatest of the democratic experiment.

While it is true that after the Great War some of the smaller nations achieved liberty, on the whole the world has not been made safe for democracy. On the contrary it has given rise to three important dictatorships, holding sway in three great countries, Russia, Germany and Italy. And while Stalin, Hitler and Mussolini have been of some benefit to their respective countries their danger looms up in lurid colors in the passing of the years. The Italian dictator struts across the stage of modern history as if he imagined that he has been invested with the proud mantles of Caesar and Napoleon. In his desire to grab a neighbour's country he has let slip the "Dogs of War," he has endangered the peace of the world, and has led Italy to the brink of a precipice.

through our school books. And it is now our solemn duty to discourage in every way the settling of national disputes by the arbitrament of the sword.

An even greater foe of representative government is to be found in bribery and corruption, extravagant government, and consequent public debt.

As a proof of this we have no need to turn back the pages of history to witness the decline of ancient Rome, that proud city that has given laws to the greater portion of mankind. To find that bribery and corruption had eaten into their vitals where industry was taxed to death, where the public revenues were often diverted from their proper channels, of protection to swell the coffers of the millions of government. We have an illustration right at our doors in Newfoundland, the ancient colony, through reckless financing, have forfeited their right to representative government and have reverted to the status of a crown colony.

And it should serve as warning to our Dominion and Provinces to strive towards the idea of honest government and balanced budgets.

We have a constitution of which we should feel proud, though the "British North America Act" requires some remodelling. We also need some form of proportional representation for the protection of minorities. Politics should be a serious business. And it is high time we got away from the miserable antiquated habit of treating the electors with liquid poison on the eve of an election. Sanity and not the dejection of reason should be the logical attitude in which to approach the ballot box. Nor can we have a real democracy "without obedience to law."
