Parents vs. Children — Dorothy Dix — Discusses Resistance of Youth

"If Parents Would Only Use as Much Tact in Dealing With Their Children as They do in Dealing With Other People, How Much it Would do to Solve the Parent-and-Child Problem!"

Why do parents scorn to use any tact in dealing with their children? Men and women know well enough that they have to employ diplomacy in getting along with each other. They have to consider the sensibilities and the vanities of those with whom they come in contact. They have to skip nimbly around the angels of the dispositions of their friends. They have to respect the Keep Off the Grass signs of their acquaintances. They have to "sell" themselves to those whose favor they crave. They have to handle their clients and their customers withe gloves.

But these very people, who are so well aware of the value of the right approach to grown-ups, use no such gumshoe method in their relations with their children. They go at them roughshod and trample their poor little feelings in the dust. They never consider how they put a thing to a child nor bother to sugar-coat the pills of advice and reproof that they administer to it.

Take the matter of obedience, for instance, which most fathers and mothers find so difficult to enforce that they have given up the effort in despair. The reason for this is that parents go about it in a way that sets up a sales resistance in the child. They arbitrarily order the child to do this or do that or not to do that without giving any reason for a command that often seems foolish and unreasonable to the child. They issue ultimatums, with threats of dire reprisals if their autocratic mandates are not complied with, and this puts the child's back up and makes it determined to resist such tyranny as far as it can.

The child disobeys not because it objects to being guided by its parents, but simply because of the parents' approach. It is one thing to forbid a child to do a thing and another thing to explain to him just exactly why it isn't best or wisest to do it and subtly suggest to the child that he is refraining from doing it of his own accord. Children really like to lean on their parents and defer to their judgments, and there would be very few disgruntled, disobedient children if their parents took them into their confidence and let them help govern themselves and made them feel that they were denied no pleasure that father and mother could give them without harming them.

Consider the brutal frankness with which we treat children and which we would not dream of using toward our worst enemies among the grown-ups, for at least when we criticise the people we don't like we do it behind their backs and not to their faces. We would never discuss Mr. Thompson's big nose in his presence or remark on Mr. Smith's awkwardness or recount Mrs. A.'s failures or remark on Mrs. B.'s homeliness.

But we are restrained by no such consideration for the feelings of children, and when little Johnny and little Mary come into the room when we are entertaining company we proceed to vivisect them without even being humane enough to give them ether to deaden their sufferings.

Aunt Mary will look Johnny over through her spectacles and say what a pity it is that he inherited the awful Jones' mouth and isn't little Mary too big for her age and where did she get those immense feet. And father will take the opportunity when there is a big dinner party on to corrct Johnny and Mary's table manners and tell that they missed passing their grade. And mother will repeat some secret the children have told her to make a good story at which everybody roars.

Then parents wonder why their children are awkward and grouchy and why they never confide in them.

And take the matter of praise and blame. The stupidest know that praise is the lever that moves the adult world. You can jolly people into doing things that you couldn't prod them into doing to save your life. Praise is quickening and blame is deadening. We all unconsciously live up to what people think of us and deliver the goods for which we get the most praise.

Apparently, however, it seldom occurs to parents that the salve-spreader is more efficasious than the hammer in rearing children. They never waste a compliment on little Johnny and Mary. Their vision is so focused on their children's defects they never see a virtue, or if they do they never mention it, and this either develops an infriority complex in the child or makes it feel that its parents are the only ones who do not appreciate it.

Now children are even more sensitive to flattery than grown-ups are, and the way to develop their virtues is to turn the spotlight on their good qualities instead of their faults. Lambast children for their bad manners and they will continue to be little boors. Praise them for their good manners when they show courtesy and consideration for others and they will become efficient little workers.

If parents would only use as much tact in dealing with their children as they do in dealing with other people, how much it would do to solve the parent-and-child problem!

WHO ARE YOU?

A MacDonough?

By RUBY HASKINS ELLIS

Connaught, Ireland, is the ancient seat of the MacDonoughs' clan. One Donoch was the earliest known bearer of the name and the spelling was finally Anglicized and became MacDonough.

Thomas MacDonough was a descendant of Donoch, and lived in County Kildare, Ireland, where he married Jane Coyle in 1712. They were Protestants.

James and John MacDonough, sons of Thomas, were among the first to come to America. James settled in New Castle County, Delaware, while John made his home on Long Island. The MacDonoughs and their descendants were ardent patriots and loyally fought for the Colonies in the struggle for independence.

Another illustrious descendant was Commodore Thomas MacDonough, who was the hero of the Battle of Lake Champlain. After this famous victory, he received a vote of thanks from Congress and was decorated with the Congressional Medal of Honor.

MacDonoughs are now scattered throughout the country but most of them are traceable to these first settlers in Delaware and New York.

Quebec Marriage Bill Ultra Vires

QUEBEC, March 28—Brigadier-Gen G. A. Smart (Conservative, West mount), in the Quebec Legislative Assembly today ran into a constitutional issue when he faced the Public Bills Committee with his bill to prohibit the issuance of marriage licenses to those who had been divorced other than in Canada, or any part of the British Empire.

The aim the General had in mind was to prevent this province being made a place of re-marriage for couples divorced in the United States or Mexico.

Premier Taschereau, pointed out that the clause in the bill in question was ultra vires, and that it would be a matter for Ottawa to legislate.

The clause read:

"No marriage licenses may be issued to any divorced person, whose former consort is still alive, except those divorced by an act of the Parliament of Canada, or by a divorce court of any Province of Canada, or elsewhere in the British Empire.

GLEN VALLEY NOTES

As spring is drawing near the farmers of the Valley are drawing nearer to the end of their winter's work. The last item on the program was sawing wood.

Mr. Herbie Buchanan of Fredericton, has finished sawing forty cords of wood for Malcolm Gillis and sawed twenty-four cords in nine hours, and better still sawing eighteen cords for Mr. B. McKenzie in the remarkable short time of four and half hours. Some of the residents of Glen Valley are busy hauling spuds to market. In this district as well as in other districts anxious eyes are turning foxwards. We in this section are getting accustomed to the sight of seeing the aeroplane passing from Summerside to Charlottetown. Our busy little boy of ninety-two years has almost completed the sawing of his wood pile. His only help is Henry Distant a good companion when the dentist files the teeth. Angus Gillis the little boy referred to came out from Scotland in 1840 at the age of two years and has never let the fire go out on the old farm since.

Our school is going on record for progress under the capable management of Miss Isla Weeks.

The many minds of the Women's Institute is at work devising ways ways and means to advance further into the world of progress.

"After all, children are the cream of humanity."

"They would be all the better for it if they were oftener whipped cream."

ENLARGED NOSE PORES

A young lady wrote to me recently saying, "I am going to a party on Thursday evening of this week and would like to get rid of the enlarged pores on my nose before that time, so will you please write at once telling me how to accomplish this?"

I would have liked nothing better than to help this young lady and thousands of others like her to get rid of enlarged pores so quickly. But such pores do not come at once and unfortunately getting rid of them is not so simple. While they can usually be conquered by persistent effort, applying a lotion on Monday or Tuesday and acquiring a fine skin in time for the party on Thursday is a miracle which beauty specialists have so far been unable to accomplish.

But let's get at these ugly enlarged pores on the nose, which I am often tempted to believe are the biggest beauty problems of my readers. In most cases such pores come from neglect. Sometimes milady does not notice that the pores on the sides of her nose, which she does not readily see when she looks into her mirror, are becoming enlarged. Perhaps she is nearly always careful about cleansing her face thoroughly at night, but sometimes when especially weary she lets it go" just this once," and so the pores begin to become enlarged and eventually, perhaps, form blackheads.

If milady would keep her skin fine in texture, she must never allow the dirt and make-up of the day to remain on overnight for even "just this once." The best way to cleanse the face at night if one has a tendency toward enlarged pores is first to use a cleansing cream to take off the surface dirt. Then use warm water and soap to dissolve the embedded grime. To do this, dip a turkish face cloth into hot water and lather it thickly with a pure mild soap. Hold this cloth over the nose, rubbing the lather gently into the skin. Now rinse the face thoroughly in clear warm water and gently press out the blackheads, or "flesh worms," as the accumulated oil in the pores is often called. These blackheads must not be forced out roughly or the skin will become bruised and blotchy After being softened first with the soap and water they should be pressed out very gently with a comedo extractor or with the fingers covered with a clean, soft cloth.

After the removal of the embedded dirt, bathe the parts with a warm boric acid solution for a few minutes. This is easily made by dissolving a heaping teaspoonful of boric acid in one pint of boiling water. Finally, apply a mild astringent and allow this to dry on the skin. The astringent is very necessary, as this closes the pores. If they are left open the above treatment is worse than useless, but the astringent contracts the pores and also makes them more active so that they will carry off the impurities instead of becoming enlarged, relaxed and lazy.

The warm witch-hazel compress is also very helpful in improving an oily skin with enlarged facial pores. This treatment has been described in this department before but for those who may have missed seeing it I shall be very glad to mail a leaflet describing the treatment to any one sending request accompanied by stamped, self-addressed envelope for mailing.

My clothes money goes much further now...

"I DO have rather an extensive wardrobe, though John's salary is a modest one.

"That is because I've learned the secret of keeping my clothes new looking a remarkably long time. Instead of spending all my clothes money replacing worn-out things, I buy extra clothes, and have a much more varied wardrobe.

"I learned my secret from reading about the movies . . . how they found that by always cleansing the screen clothes in Lux, they stayed just like new more than twice as long!

"It's so simple a method any woman can use it. And it certainly works! My underthings and hosiery and dresses stay beautifully new looking ever so much longer. That is how I can afford so many pretty things."

You, too, can have more clothes if you always use Lux! . . . Because with Lux everything you wear stays like new so much longer, you'll have money for those extra things every woman wants.

Maritime Women's Activities

The term "weaker sex" as applied to women, lost some of its point here recently, when Miss Bernice Matheson, proprietor of a tea room in Amherst, N.S., gave a display of heroism that many a man might envy. Just ebfore closing time, a man, who had been in her shop earlier in the evening, presumably to "sizeup" the situation, returned, and walking to the counter asked for a match. This, apparently, was an excuse for reanhing over and grabbing a purse containing forty dollars from a shelf. He then attempted to seize the young lady by the arms. Eluding him, Miss Matheson picked up a loded revolver from a box and pulled the trigger. The bullet just grazed his clothing and entered the wall about 8 feet behind. Then she cooly directed the weapon at her assailant and backed nim to the door, through which the would-be robber made a hasty exit.
