Your Baby and You

by Ruth Parsons

By the time your baby is four months old, a play pen is practically a "must" piece of equipment. So if you can't afford to buy one, get hubby to build one —preferably one with a raised floor that keeps baby above floor drafts indoors and cold ground outdoors. A play pen will look after baby for hours at a time while you do your work . . . and it will also enable baby to develop his muscles as he likes and in his own good time. Before putting baby and his toys in the play pen, place a thick pad on the floor, and over it a rubber sheet and then an ordinary sheet. Don't encourage him to do exercises. It's best to let him handle the sitting up and pulling up business in his own way.

At about the time your baby is ready for a play pen, he's probably also ready for solid foods. Here, you'll find the 22 varieties of Heinz Baby Foods are a real Mother's Aid Society in themselves. Carefully selected from the choicest, foods . . . cooked to retain minerals and vitamins in high degree . . . and strained to a smooth, even texture . . . Heinz Baby Foods are easy to swallow, easy to digest. And when your doctor suggests coarser-textured food for baby, the 12 varieties of Heinz Junior Foods are available to assure continued wholesome nourishment and tempting flavour for baby's menu.

FERRY TRIPS CONTINUED—"Southerly gales during Monday night brought large quantities of drift ice into Charlottetown harbour from the straits" Captain Thomas Paquet, in command of the S. S. Fairview, told a Guardian reporter yesterday. He said that this drift ice caused considerable delay and difficulty in the ferry's trips between Charlottetown and Rocky Point during the day, resulting in her only making four round trips instead of the regular six. The service, he said, would continue until such time as freeze-ups made it impossible to carry on. Despite the delays, residents of Rocky Point took full advantage of the service yesterday. During one trip in the afternoon, the ferry transported 26 teams of horses and sleighs, plus 50 passengers from Rocky Point to Charlottetown, which is believed to be a record.

A rousing game of "Boom Coming Over" (as Beaver says "it's the rage") was played until once more the Captain as well as the crew were either exhausted or jailed.
