THE THREE JULIANS.

appear for the last time at Wonderland this evening. Their engagement with this popular house has met with unbounded success and the efforts of the management to secure these clever people have been shown due appreciation if crowded houses and hearty applause are the criterions to judge by. These equilibrists and acrobats are certainly worth going to see of themselves and each performance excels the former one so exceptionally good are their various acts. The three Julians have marked an era in popular and good performance here and Wonderland has scord another huge success by their engagement.

It will be worth while to watch Wonderland's daily announcements after this. Such a series of surprises and entertainments as it has in store for its patrons has never been dreamed of here before and no one of them should be missed. Wonderland is true to its name—it is a land of wonders and amusements unexcelled anywhere from the standpoint of real, genuine amusement, mingled with just enough of comedy to take the too serious side of any subject off, and plenty of instruction thrown in as something to season the whole, thereby making for a faultless entertainment every time.

THE KING VERSU EDWIN O. BROWN

After the Jury returned their verdict that the prisoner is sane, Mr. D. C. McLeod, K.C., addressed the Court as follows:—

"I would ask the indulgence of the Court for a few moments to call attention to a matter of a personal character. It appears that during the hearing of the case in which the Jury has just come down, my name was freely used, and charges made against me and my firm were read in Court, and I don't know whether they were commented on or not. I think it due to this Court, of which I have the honor to be an officer, that I set myself right before the court; and I also think it due to myself personally—more particularly as the charges have now been published in a newspaper which I read this morning,—that I should make a statement of my relations with Mr. Brown.

"Mr. Brown came to my office as a student and clerk in the spring of 1900, I think it was in April. I had previously promised him and arranged with him that I should pay him one hunhred dollars a year for the first two years of his apprenticeship, and one hundred and fifty dollars a year for the remaining three years. It appears he charges that I did not pay him. I may say this: I do not want to do any injustice to Mr. Brown I have no animus against him at all. Some time elapsed after we made the arrangement before he came to the office as an articled student, and of course for that he was not paid, nor did he ask for payment. After he came in as a student he received payment whenever he asked for it. I never refused to pay him. He was paid sometimes weekly, sometimes monthly, just as he required the money. At the end of his apprenticeship he had been paid a little more than was due him—I am not finding fault with him at all for that—but there was a trifle of eleven dollars, and he wanted to commence the practice of his profession on his own account, and had to pay his fee to the Law Society. It was twenty-five dollars, We gave him the twenty-five dollars, and we added the eleven dollars to it, and he gave his note for thirty-six dollars. This is the note. (Produced.)

"As regards the allegation that it was by virtue of his threat to leave the office that we paid him his salary, that is not true. I am very sorry that I have to stand here and make a statement against Mr. Brown. It is true that in the last year of his apprenticeship he hid wish to change his articles and leave the offie, but that had nothing to do, My Lord, I assure you, with the payment of money. I do not think it proper, or that I am called upon, to give the reasons for which Mr. Brown wished to change offices, but at any rate I told him—Mr. Brown, you may change your articles at any moment; I am perfectly willing,' but after that, as far as I can remember he never broached the subject. At any rate he never left and I never refused to assign his articles. He never complained to me of not receiving money. I do not wish to take up the time of the Court unduly, but I think it is only right that I should make this statement, and I thank articles at any moment, I am per-Your Lordships for having heard me. I am not of course finding fault with the Counsel on either side, but I do think it was outside of the province of a news-paper to publish charges of this kind."

THE CHIEF JUSTICE, presiding at the trial, in reply said:—

"So far as the Court is concerned, even if you had not thought it proper to make this statement, which you have now made to the Court, I would have felt satisfied in my mind that you were quite innocent of the charge against you. You have been a long time a member of the Bar, and my experience is that there is no barrister that I can point to in whom I have more confidence than yourself; and I was very sorry to hear the charges that were made. From my knowledge of you I thought there must surely be some satisfactory explanation of it, and I am very glad you have taken this opportunity to place yourself in a proper position as a member of the Bar before the Court and public. I am quite sure that no one who reads it in the newspaper and who knows the high standing you have always maintained in this community—both you and your partner Mr. Bentley—will be in the slighest degree influenced by it; and I should very much regret to hear that they had, or that any person in the community should be influenced by the charge set forth in this rambling dorument read in Court.

"What I say to you, Mr. McLeod, applies equally to your partner Mr. Bentley, who is a member of the Bar in high standing and respectability, and in whom the Court has every confidence, as they have in you."
